Chapter 86

86 – Jenna, the outrageous woman.

Time seemed to have stopped, as the two ex-lovers locked gazes. The auditorium froze as people looked on in both admirati ed on in both admiration and criticism, while they wondered the reason for Jenna’s return. Mutters spiraled as Jenna expected, developing a thick skin to them.

“The shameless woman is back again.”

“Who is she?”

“A whore who tried to seduce Mr Blade five years ago.” “And she’s back?” “Is that why everyone is looking at her? I thought it was because she was stunning.” “Stunning indeed, but also vicious.”

The Blade seniors were greatly annoyed. New ones had joined but didn’t know Jenna. Only Noah and Rex with two others who were at grandpa’s party five years ago did.

Hunter couldn’t get through to Casper to tell him to focus, thereby sending the message through Cathan. Cathan didn’t understand what was going on but acted on Hunter’s instruction. He drew closer to Casper and whispered,

“Casper, Hunter said you should focus.” Casper suddenly regained himself, dropping his gaze. There was nothing as difficult for him as seeing Jenna in front of him, yet pretending like she wasn’t there. He turned his attention to Rex,

“Go on.”

The auditorium broke out into murmurs again. Some people who had been at grandpa’s birthday party five years back could recall how Casper doted on Jenna. Right now, he seemed indifferent towards her.

“He doesn’t care about her anymore.”

“Did she think that he was going to be treating her as a princess like the last time?”

“She is so outrageous.”

Jenna swallowed the pain cruising through her heart and forced a smile. She looked so beautiful that no one knew how much she was hurting. Casper lied to her. He said she could return at any time and he would be there for her but now, he seemed so foreign. The worst part was, he was looking so handsome that she couldn’t keep her eyes off him. Did he even miss her at all? 1

She indeed hurt him with her departure. While she made her way to her seat, some rich bachelors, who didn’t know their story, decided to try their luck. Jenna was indeed gorgeous.

“Pretty lady, there’s an empty seat here.” The guy who was one of the youngest CEOs beckoned to a seat beside him. Jenna was about to thank him politely and reject the offer when another one interrupted, “Don’t listen to him. Come and sit here,” he beckoned to the seat in front of him. Seeing that she was unmoved, one of them stood up and held her by the waist. It was just a courteous move but somebody who was getting engaged tonight was like a raging volcano. Soon, all the wild emotions he was suppressing might burst out if those men kept getting close to Jenna.

Jenna stiffened and before she could tell him to mind his business, Caleb and Cathan appeared from nowhere. “She’s already taken, gentlemen.” Caleb said politely and began to lead her to where Kate and Peggy sat.

They knew that Casper would hurt anyone who got close to Jenna, thereby saving the life of those innocent men. The peaceful night mustn’t be ruined like five and half years ago.

Before Jenna reached there, Kate and Peggy had already met her halfway, flung themselves over her. It was a tearful reunion. The men went back to join Casper, whose expression had greatly darkened because of the man who held Jenna by the waist. If Cathan and Caleb hadn’t gotten there on time, Casper might have ruined everything again.

Donna was trying hard to hide her disdain, pain, and jealousy. Jenna had to come and ruined everything again. She knew that she didn’t stand a chance with Jenna and was greatly displeased. Now, she wasn’t sure if Casper was going to proceed but was surprised when she was pushed to the end of her finger.

Her heart stopped for a moment, as she stared at the man who had a blend of coldness and indifference. She didn’t know whether to be happy or sad because the man never showed his emotions and she didn’t even know him. After the night she sneaked into his room over five years ago, they only met again during the announcement and now.

Applause filled the air and the music bellowed. It was time for the couple to dance. As Casper led Donna to the dance floor, he couldn’t see Jenna’s expression and was displeased because her back was turned to him. All he could see and think about was Jenna.

“Where have you been? I never thought I’d see you again,” Kate exclaimed excitedly, while assessing Jenna carefully. When Jenna was about to respond, Peggy chimed in, “You look so beautiful. What have you been eating and doing?”

Jenna turned her attention to Peggy and just as she was about to respond, Kate asked again,

“Are you back for good?”

Jenna could only smile through and through without answering any questions till she heard the applause and turned around to see that Casper had slipped a ring on Donna’s finger. She swallowed the pain and forced a smile but her hand trembled so she balled them into fists to stabilize herself.

When she heard the music, she knew they were dancing and forced herself to look away. Casper was getting more and more uneasy. Was this working or it was just going to compound his problems.

He had turned on his bluetooth after Cathan gave him Hunter’s message and communicated through it. “Is it working? How is she?” He was greatly worried about offending Jenna. Hunter wanted to laugh. The almighty CEO who ruled the dark mafia was afraid of a woman.” It’s working perfectly but you are dancing badly. There isn’t any chemistry like when you danced with Jenna five years ago.”

Casper gritted his teeth. How could any chemistry exist between them when he felt nothing for her? “I’m trying my best,” he said and ended the call.

When the music ended, he was so exhilarated and led Donna to the table reserved for them.

Luckily, it was opposite Jenna’s. From where he sat, Donna was facing him so her back was turned to Jenna. Casper stole glances at Jenna through his sunglasses but no one including the woman in front of him noticed.

“Jen, did you return because of him?” Peggy asked. She could see that Jenna was fighting the urge to look in front of her because Casper was sitting on the next table with Donna.

“Yes,” Jenna was honest.

“But, isn’t it too late?” Kate asked, greatly worried about how things had turned out. Too late? Jenna was startled. What if Casper announced a date for he and Donna’s wedding? She couldn’t watch that happen.

“No. I’ll go and talk to him.” “Jenna, please don’t.” Kate was afraid that she’ll embarrass herself. It also pained her that Jenna was so desperate. For as long as she knew, the desperate one used to be Casper.

Jenna lacked the confidence so she spoke through her bluetooth. “I need whiskey.” Anna heard it and quickly came to serve her whiskey. When Anna was leaving, one of the Blade seniors called her and gave her an envelope.

“Drop a little in that woman’s drink,” he ordered, referring to Jenna. Anna readily agreed, insulting him in her mind. If she hadn’t come up with this plan, who would have known what these evil men would do to her princess? To drop it in Jenna’s drink, they’ll see about that. She was dressed as a waitress so no one discerned who she truly was.

When she was out of sight, Rex asked the senior, Phillip, who gave her the envelope containing cash and some substance. “What do you want with her?” He asked sternly, recalling the sacrifices Jenna made for Casper so though he didn’t like her, he didn’t hate her either.

“Nothing. I just want to send her far away and make sure she doesn’t remember anything. That drug will just wipe her memory by the time she wakes up in a strange place,” the senior confessed. Noah couldn’t help getting involved.

“Strange place?” he asked suspiciously. Casper might be engaged to Donna but he and Rex knew that he still loved Jenna and would get even with anyone who hurt her. They had heard rumors about what Casper did to grandpa, resulting in his disappearance over the years.

“Yes. I’ve already contacted some people to kidnap her. Do you want her to mess up Casper’s head again?” The senior, Phillip asked. When Noah and Rex refused to answer, he added, “Everything was fine without her.” “But Casper has given her no attention. You don’t have to do this,” Rex said sternly.

“You are too weak. That’s why I like grandpa better,” Phillip retorted.

“If Casper finds out and comes after you, don’t say that I didn’t warn you,” Noah warned him but Phillip was determined.

Well, Anna had passed the information to Marshall with details of the senior who gave her the drug and cash. Marshall’s plan was simple. That senior had only one child and he was present at the party. After sending his picture to Anna, she added the content to a drink and took it to the young man who looked like twenty one.

As careless as the boy was, he drank it and asked for more. A while later, he passed out. Phillip rushed to his son and had his bodyguards take him to the hospital. He didn’t see when Anna served a drink to his son and thought that perhaps he drank too much. When his son woke up, he didn’t recognize him. Instantly, he knew Anna had drugged his son. She would pay for this.

Jenna gained her needed confidence and walked to Casper and Donna’s table. Just the word, “Hi,” sent Casper’s mind racing, hearing her voice again. However, he appeared indifferent towards her.

“Miss Nova, we meet again.”

Miss Nova? Jenna was mad but seeing Donna smiling, she forced a smile. She won’t let Donna win.

“Mr Blade, I’d like to have a word with you in private.” Casper felt uncomfortable when she addressed him as such but played by the rules. He knew that she was getting back at him. He also knew that should he take Jenna anywhere to speak in private, they would end up in bed together because she was just irresistible and he missed her badly.

“I’m sorry miss Nova, only one woman has my attention tonight and that woman isn’t you. As you can see, I’m already engaged and the woman before me is the only one who has my attention.”

Jenna could feel her heart shattering like pieces of broken glass. Being accustomed to Casper’s sweet side, it was hard to endure the indifference he showed her. Donna was blooming from ear to ear. Her parents would be so proud of her. However, she wasn’t expecting Jenna’s response. “I will just wait till you can spare me a little time.”

She went back to pick her chair but as soon as she made the effort, a cute guy asked her, “where are you taking it?” “To that table.” She beckoned to where Casper sat. The guy instantly carried the chair for her. “Thank you,” she said politely. “I’d love to have a drink with you,” the guy made his intentions known. “I will think about it,” Jenna smiled and said. Casper’s eyes darkened with their exchange and his expression turned colder. The three of them kept mute for the longest time, as tension began to build up around the table, infecting the huge and luxuriously decorated auditorium like a virus. People were cursing Jenna through mutters.

Casper was glad to have her close and focused his gaze on her. Indeed, she had changed. She was prettier, bolder and stronger, no longer the damsel in distress.

The Blade seniors were angry. Rex had realized too late that the waiter had made a mistake so Phillip was in the hospital with his son who couldn’t recognize him.

Whichever way, he couldn’t feel any form of pity for the man. Even without Casper’s help, Jenna seemed to be protected by some invisible force. It seemed that history was about to repeat itself.

Donna was upset. Jenna was an outrageous woman, forcing herself on Casper. She couldn’t allow it. They were now engaged so she had the right to fight for her man. She broke the silence. “Jenna, let’s talk in private.”

“Sure,” Jenna agreed.

Since Hunter said that Casper should let Jenna handle Donna, he excused them and went to welcome some of his guests, especially the new Dons but sat where he could watch the two women closely after. . “You shameless bitch, what are you up to?” Donna raged and asked. Seeing Donna angry, Jenna already felt like she won, though the former had the ring.

She smiled and winked, “what do you think?”
