Chapter 511 - 505: Survival

Chapter 511: Chapter 505: Survival

This was also a sewer passageway. Finn Lewis quickly followed the lad further inside. Once inside the passage, the little one slowed down his pace. Finn looked back; there was no sound coming from the entrance—the Parasite Humans must have been shaken off. Only then did he breathe a sigh of relief.

The lad remained silent, and so did Finn, who just plodded behind him. He must be a survivor. But Finn did not drop his guard. On Earth, he had been influenced by countless post-apocalyptic novels and movies like Resident Evil. In such an apocalyptic world, the civilization and order humans had built had already collapsed. Sometimes, the zombies outside, or the Parasite Humans, were not the most terrifying things.

The most terrifying were these surviving humans. Although the lad had risked danger to rescue Finn, he shouldn't be a bad person. The lad didn't know that Finn could at any time leave this six-dimensional space, and had Zero as a powerful backer.

“Alright, we're almost there.” After about ten minutes, the lad suddenly spoke.

Finn grunted in response, without saying additional words. After turning around the corner, a hint of light suddenly appeared, shining a tiny bit of brightness into the gloom of the sewer tunnel.

“Ting ting,” two crisp knocking sounds suddenly came from ahead. The lad reached out his hand and knocked on the wall a few times, too. Only then did someone poke their head out from the place where the light was seeping out.

“Come here.” The lad looked back at Finn and hesitated before speaking.

Finn nodded and calmly walked forward. After he turned into the illuminated tunnel, he found, somewhat surprised, that it was different from his imagined survivor gathering point. This was a dead-end tunnel. At the connection with their tunnel was an iron door, possibly used for sealing the tunnel in the past.

Probably about tens of meters long, one end of this tunnel had collapsed and been thoroughly sealed off. On the other side, there was this sealing door, which could close off to create a small room.

As Finn walked in, the lad had already approached the child in their “room” and stood to block her behind him. Then he just stared at Finn. It was a little girl, and the lad who had just brought Finn back was a little boy. Both of them were young, the boy being at most thirteen or fourteen.

The tunnel fell into silence for a moment. After about ten seconds, Finn softly spoke, “Thank you for saving me.”

“You’re welcome.” The leading boy glanced at Finn and responded softly, but those eyes under the glow of a broken kerosene lamp still shone with caution.

“That... My name is Finn Lewis. What are your names?” Finn continued in Federation Language.

“My name is McDon, and hers is Laura Rhodes.” The boy introduced themselves.

“McDon, thank you.” Finn said earnestly. From the situation here, their lives were not very good, but they had still risked their lives to bring him back. Even though Finn hadn’t spent a lot of time in this world, he had seen TV and read novels. He understood how hard it could be in a world like this.

“No need to thank, but... why did you attract so many Parasite Humans?” McDon hesitantly asked after giving a comforting pat to Laura’s hand, which was holding onto his clothes.

“Well... alright, I’ll tell the truth. You may have noticed that my clothes are not ordinary.” Finn had quickly made up an excuse in his mind.

Finn had noticed earlier that although the kids are young, their harsh life had made them mature. Since the moment they entered the tunnel, McDon had been eyeing Finn’s clothes. The protection suit he wore was obviously not ordinary. After all, he had just jumped into the Stinky Water Pool and swam out. However, his clothes didn’t show any signs of having been in water. It was also not like ordinary clothes. Now, his protection suit was no longer casual in appearance but had returned to its original tight-fitting state.

“Yes,” McDon nodded, agreeing with Finn’s explanation.

“In fact, I am a soldier from a secret project of the official department. During an experiment, I was frozen until yesterday when I was liberated from the cryo.

Unexpectedly, when I woke up, this world had changed completely—all people acting as if they were mad...” Finn narrated his lie based on the plots of various movies he had seen on Earth.

There was no way to tell how long this world had been in this state. If it has been too long, the children would have been much younger when it all started and hence they wouldn't have stood a chance to survive. But it also hadn't been too short, because many of the roads outside were covered with stubborn weeds.

Finn didn't know whether McDon believed his explanation. Though McDon's caution relaxed a bit, he stayed vigilant to some degree, but asked curiously, “Didn't you know what happened?”

“Not sure. What has actually happened?” Finn knew only bits of the cause from Zero, but details like what kind of creature the alien Insect Species were weren't told.

“It was aliens. About two years ago, a meteor fell. But when it was about to hit the ground, it slowed down. It cracked open on the ground and Insect Species crawled out. Many people were parasitized by insects about the size of a thumb. After parasitization, they lost consciousness and became like the living dead, biting everyone they saw and living on swallowing humans who hadn't been parasitized...” As McDon recounted this, he shivered, clearly recalling some unpleasant scenes.

Finn listened silently. These Parasite Humans' behaviors were quite similar to the zombies from movies. The only difference was that Parasite Humans' weak point was not only their heads. If you hit other parts of their body, they would also die—but only the host body. The parasite was still alive. It would crawl out of the dead host body and instinctively seek other hosts.

Chapter 512 - 506: Companions

Chapter 512: Chapter 506: Companions

McDon Taylor probably spent more than half an hour explaining to Finn Lewis. Just like Zero said, most of the creatures that invaded this world were infection bugs. Other Insect Species were very rare, but not non-existent. For instance, infection bugs did not appear alone. They were bred by a kind of mother bug almost the size of an elephant, which could burrow as well. The infection bugs were released by this mother bug. Its appearance resembles a massive rat, and its exceptionally robust body could rival a tank.

Moreover, it could spit out a deadly corrosive liquid capable of eroding many things. There was also another very aggressive Insect Species, but McDon had never seen them, only knowing they could fly.

“Brother, I’m starving.” As soon as McDon was done with his explanation, Laura Rhodes, who was next to him, timidly pulled at McDon’s clothes and said.

After some hesitation, McDon glanced at Finn before cautiously walking deeper into the passage. About ten minutes later, he came back from the passage holding a can that, judging by its appearance, was probably over two years old. Whether the contents were still edible was a question, but Finn could tell from McDon’s eyes that they would never afford themselves such luxuries under normal circumstances.

“This is the last can of food we have left. We’ll split it in half. After you eat, you should leave. I’ve told you the characteristics of the Parasite Humans. You should be able to survive safely,” McDon said to Finn, his voice betraying a hint of fear, as though he was frightened of something.

Looking at fast-disappearing canned food in his hand, then at Laura swallowing repeatedly next to him, Finn laughed bitterly. He thought for a moment before standing up and saying, “You two wait here for me, I’ll go get some things.”

Without waiting for a response, Finn turned around and left. After a while, he said, “Zero, I need to take out some food.”

This was the first time Finn felt he had made an excellent decision. If he had only brought weapons, finding food would indeed be a problem. Though there was certainly food in this world, Finn didn’t know if he would be able to eat food that was over two years expired.

Zero quickly provided an address. It was actually in this sewer. As for how Zero had placed it here, Finn didn’t care. His protective suit’s main control system was activated. Finn opened the suit’s screen and quickly charted out the entire area.

Especially the sewer network here, Finn believed he would have to spend a very long time in these sewers in the future. He quickly found the food zero had placed here. Looking up, he realized that the place was just a sewer manhole. All the food was well packed. Finn bagged them and carried them swiftly back along the route he came.

It wasn’t far from where McDon and Laura lived. Finn came back quickly. As he approached the entrance, he saw McDon waiting there, apparently wary of Finn bringing back something dangerous. After looking at Finn, and then the bag Finn was carrying, McDon hesitated for a moment, but remained silent and turned to walk back inside.

Once they reached where McDon and Laura lived, Finn put down the bundles he was carrying. "Thank you for saving my life, all of these things are food, please eat." Finn laughed and untied the bundle in his hands.

When Finn had bought them, he picked up some convenient food like noodle soup, bread, sausages, cans and such. But these fresh looking items were a miracle in the eyes of McDon and Laura. They hadn't seen such things in a long time. "Where... where did these come from?" McDon asked Finn with astonishment.

Seeing that Finn had brought a lot of food, some of the wariness vanished from McDon's eyes.

"I brought them from where I was before. Though much time has passed, the food is well preserved," Finn said with a smile.

"Eat." Finn immediately took out two sausages and two breads and handed them to McDon and Lola Collins, regardless that the labels were written in Flame Nation's language, which they couldn't read anyhow.

"Wait." As Laura was about to grab one, McDon suddenly shouted, and Laura quickly drew back her hand.

"What's the matter?" Finn asked, slightly puzzled. Search the website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

"This... there are too many. You didn't bring much food, we cannot be so extravagant. There are three of us here, and finding food is tough. If we finish it all at once, we'll be left without," McDon hesitated for a moment, looked at Finn and said cautiously.

"Don't worry about it. After we finish this, we'll find more. There should be lots of places in the city with food," After more than two years, most of the city's food should've been consumed. Even if there was the remaining, it would likely have spoiled. However, some must have slipped through the crack, and Finn believed he could find them.

Although Finn didn't bring a lot of food, there's also not that few either. To merely feed two children, it should be enough for the three of them to eat for several days.

"Just eat it," seeing McDon still hesitating, Finn quickly took one of the bags of bread, opened it, took out a bottle of mineral water, opened it, and handed them to Laura.

Smelling the sweet aroma from the bread, Laura swallowed, glanced at her own brother and saw that he had no objections. She quickly stretched out her hand to snatch the bread from Finn's hand and ate it in an unsophisticated manner. "It...it's delicious," she said as she enjoyed it, unable to help but groan like a kitten.

Finn quickly opened another sausage and handed it to McDon. Seeing that Finn had already opened it, McDon obviously couldn't resist, he reached out to take it, bit off a small piece, and his face showed a satisfied expression.

Watching the two kids enjoy something that would have been deemed as junk food in his old timeline as if it were a delicious feast, Finn couldn't put his feelings into words, but it didn't feel great.

Shortly after, McDon and Laura finished eating, but it was clear that they were not full. But no matter how much Finn encouraged them to eat more, they refused to do so. After hesitating for a moment, Finn did not insist anymore. He simply handed the food to Laura and McDon. "You keep the food. I don't have anywhere else to go, so consider it as my rent for staying here, alright?" Finn laughed and said to the two of them.

A look of indescribable emotion flashed in McDon's eyes. He stared at Finn for a long time before carefully nodding his head and saying, "Okay."

Chapter 513 - 507: Crazy Idea

Chapter 513: Chapter 507: Crazy Idea

With a packet of food, Finn Lewis gained the trust of the two little ones, as he had eaten very little, giving most of the food to them. However, it couldn't last for long, so Lewis needed to go out with McDon Taylor to find food. Search the website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

For Lewis, this was excellent news because he needed to deal with the issues raised by the Parasite Humans. Being with McDon Taylor, who was familiar with the Parasite Humans and the surrounding environment, was undoubtedly beneficial. Besides a minor incident on the first day out with Taylor, Lewis had managed to survive and then quickly grew stronger thanks to his trusty handgun.

He didn't use his two handguns very often. One simple reason was that Lewis had forgotten to acquire silencers. Although the power of the two Desert Eagles had been enhanced, their noise was no different from ordinary handguns. Firing a gun in such a city was essentially suicide.

Although Lewis was virtually safe from the Parasite Humans, he had to be cautious due to Taylor's close proximity. Often during combat, Lewis would forget about the tricks at his disposal because of his nerves. However, the positive side was that this helped to integrate the knowledge fed into his mind by the Zero.

A month had passed in the blink of an eye, and Lewis had experienced drastic changes. The harshness of the apocalypse had taught him much in this short time. While his physical abilities had improved, with his skills surpassing those of special forces soldiers, the changes in his mentality were most significant. In this post-apocalyptic world, he had seen many things unseen in ordinary life. Lewis now resembled an old soldier who had survived a world war. There were no rules or morality in this world, only survival; and everything else was non-existent.

"We're preparing to leave," Lewis said, looking at McDon Taylor and Laura Rhodes in front of him.

Taylor and Rhodes nodded heavily. They chose to live here not because they wanted to stay but because they lacked the ability to escape from the city. Though there were abundant supplies in the city at the beginning, most of them had either been used up or spoiled over two years. If they didn't escape now, they wouldn't last much longer.

Before they had lacked the ability, but now it was different. With Lewis leading the way out, there was hope. Although it was a giant city in the past, there were not as many Parasite Humans there as they had expected. Lewis had decided to take them somewhere they could survive and then return to society.

Lewis had completed his mission half a month ago. Since then, he had taught Taylor survival skills and combat techniques. While Lewis couldn't feed combat skills and experience directly into Taylor's mind like Zero, Taylor was a fast learner. Taylor was different; he had lived in this world for over two years and had gained valuable combat experience.

Even though a lot of it was self-taught, those were lessons he learned from numerous near-death experiences, making them exceptionally practical. With slight guidance from Lewis, Taylor's combat abilities improved significantly. All he lacked was a healthy body.

Lewis took Taylor and Rhodes and began moving through the sewers toward the outskirts of the city. Although there were dangers in the sewers, including several Parasite Humans, Lewis had no problem dealing with them. It took about half a day for Lewis to move from their hiding place to the city's edge.

The next journey was the hardest because they couldn't proceed through the sewers anymore. They had to escape the entire city above ground. Lewis arranged Taylor and Rhodes underground and stealthily opened the manhole cover on his head. According to the mini radar on his protective suit, there were no Parasite Humans nearby. Lewis was sure to double-check visually.

Once he confirmed there were no Parasite Humans around, Lewis opened the manhole cover and let Taylor and Rhodes come out. He found a map of Turner City in the past few days. After determining his current location on the map, he directed Taylor and Rhodes silently towards a certain direction.

But before they could leave the alley, a humming sound rang out, and the sky quickly darkened. Lewis was startled and looked up, which shocked him, Taylor, and Rhodes.

A huge shadow appeared in the clear sky, at least tens of kilometers high. Even so, its vast size almost obscured the entire sky. It resembled a giant airship. The only difference was its size was described as sky-covering!

“Zero, what is that?” Lewis didn’t care about hiding Zero’s existence. Anyone would be shocked by such a sight, even Lewis who had seen a cloaking spacecraft.

It was too huge! Can you imagine how terrifying it is to see something that can block the entire sky, especially when it’s tens of kilometers above the ground?

‘Parasite Insect Species Icarus’s Interstellar Transport Super Battle Beast—best known as Void Behemoth or Leviathan.’ Zero’s voice promptly echoed in Lewis’s mind.

Chapter 514 - 508: Void Behemoth

Chapter 514: Chapter 508: Void Behemoth

Void Behemoth? Leviathan?

Finn Lewis’s pupils constricted violently. The name seemed vaguely familiar, and now connected to this being, his expression turned incredibly peculiar. “Zero, if I remember correctly, in the BF Game, isn’t there a star-transporting monster called Leviathan within the Insect Species?”

“Correct, I explained it in this way to make it easier for you to understand,” Zero responded succinctly.

Finn Lewis suddenly felt his head ache. You explained it correctly, but do you not realize how shocking this is?! Dammit!

“However, can you tell me the specifics about this thing?” Finn Lewis felt an indescribable pressure in his heart. Even though he could leave this space at any moment, he still felt an indescribable sense of terror. It was horrifying.

“Its size is roughly equivalent to Earth’s moon. Even for the Icarus Insect Species, giving birth to such a Leviathan is extremely challenging, requiring a significant amount of time, and even the resources of several planets. However, once it appears, it could almost be said to be invincible within the universe. Of course, relatively speaking. The Leviathan is not indestructible, but before you can destroy it, you have to withstand the relentless attacks of the psychoactive flying units housed inside it,” Zero finally decided to share more information.

The size of a moon... Finn Lewis nearly dropped his jaw. What the hell, is this thing even real? A creature as big as the moon is far-fetched even for the fearsome Insect Species. And these are space-traveling Insects. Just the thought of it was terrifying. Looking at the entity in the sky, Finn Lewis suddenly felt as if the world was beyond saving. He thought how lucky he was that he didn't open the six-dimensional space to a permanent temporal channel. If he had, the consequences would undoubtedly be dire.

The fun could very well turn into disaster.

“Wait a minute. Zero, you just mentioned, for Icarus's Insect Species, giving birth to such a Leviathan is extremely difficult?” Finn Lewis suddenly remembered something and asked anxiously.

“Correct!”

“Does that mean it holds a very high status amongst the Icarus's Insect Species?” Finn Lewis asked swiftly.

“Given your intelligence, you should be able to figure that out.” Zero made a comment that almost made Finn Lewis curse out loud!

“Ok then, so basically, an important figure from the Insect Species has arrived, right? That's what you mean? And you said before, the true governing layer of the Icarus's Insect Species possesses high intellect that is in no way inferior to Wisdom Creatures like us humans, right?” Finn Lewis continued to inquire.

“Yes, but don't hold your hopes too high. Understanding and wisdom are two different things. They might possess wisdom, but that doesn't mean they think like you do. Each species has different ways of thinking. For example, their understanding of evolution may be survival of the fittest, and the weak are meant to be eliminated. This principle will never change,” Zero plainly replied.

“I understand, but that's not what I meant. I've played StarCraft, and the insect hierarchy in that game is very similar to that of Icarus's Insect Species. As far as I remember, wasn't there a human who became the supreme leader of the insect species?” Finn Lewis asked, trying to gauge the situation. The Insect Species is powerful, isn't it? It didn't take much thought to realize that. This species, whose middle and lower classes make up the bulk of their military force, rarely possess wisdom. They fearlessly face death, and upon being commanded by the higher-ranking insects, even a single insect would dare to launch an attack on a planet. Their fighting capacity was off the charts.

Zero seemed to be speechless at Finn Lewis's question. It took her about ten seconds to respond. “The caste system of the Icarus Insect Species is extremely hierarchical.

Your suggestion is theoretically possible in a game, but unless you can kill the reigning Supreme Ruler of the insect species and take her place, you stand no chance. Do you think you can kill one? A mere leak of their psychic energy can annihilate your brain instantly..."

Sweat ran down Finn Lewis's forehead. "You don't have to put me down like that, do you? I mean, I still have you, right?"

"Your confidence in me is too much," Zero frankly replied.

Finn Lewis was taken aback. This was the first time Zero had said something like this. Zero was always very confident before.

"Anyway, you still haven't told me what this situation is all about," Finn Lewis mentioned, pointing at the entity in the sky.

"Nothing much, it seems the Insect Species are preparing to fully occupy this planet and use it as a breeding ground," Zero said casually.

Finn Lewis was stupefied for a moment. He was about to say something when suddenly there was a violent commotion behind him. Finn Lewis got startled, and Laura Rhodes even let out a scream. Although she quickly covered her mouth, it didn't hide her fear. Normally, having witnessed numerous Parasite Humans, Laura shouldn't have been scared to this extent. However, when Finn Lewis turned around, even his nerves tightened immediately.

"Quick! This way." Finn Lewis instantly pulled the two kids into a nearby building. Normally, Finn Lewis would never do this, as no one knew whether there were Parasite Humans hiding inside these buildings. But at this moment, he didn't have time to worry about that. Swarms of Parasite Humans burst from the city behind him, as though something was madly chasing them.

There were no Parasite Humans in this building. Finn Lewis led McDon Taylor and Laura Rhodes straight to the rooftop. The building wasn't very high, only seven floors. Lying on the rooftop, Finn Lewis carefully looked down. The sight below was extraordinarily spectacular. It was like witnessing a mass migration of large animals in the Cana Kingdom or Liga State. Search the NôveFire.net website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

Countless Parasite Humans continuously rushed out of the city, then started to move swiftly in this direction. The Parasite Humans rushing out from every direction in the city quickly formed a vast river of bodies, making the scene seem exceedingly terrifying. Witnessing this, Finn Lewis felt a shiver down his spine, even though he had seen similar situations in biohazard movies before.

But the zombies in those biohazard movies didn't possess such shocking force. These Parasite Humans were nearly pushing their strength and speed to their human limits. It was too horrifying.

Fortunately, perhaps due to some command, these Parasite Humans, controlled by infection bugs, completely ignored the existence of Finn Lewis, McDon Taylor, and Laura Rhodes, and they quickly rushed away. Just as Finn Lewis was contemplating what could be going on, suddenly, with a "boom," the terrifying Void Behemoth in the sky violently sprouted a massive chunk of purplish-black matter. When this happened, the Void Behemoth in the sky was enveloped by purple light.

Immediately afterward, a dazzling purple light flashed, and the terrifying Void Behemoth Leviathan that had just darkened the sky vanished into thin air.

"Temporal jump. It's already headed to another planet," Zero's voice suddenly volunteered.

Finn Lewis was rendered speechless. Damn, was this really a creature? Using its own body to travel through space? Moreover, it's a space journey involving a temporal jump.

"What exactly did it just throw down?" Finn asked curiously.

"A ball of nutrients, as well as the Insect Species' Worker Bee Queen," Zero's voice replied.

A worker bee? Finn wasn't sure if Zero translated it that way for his understanding, or if that's how this creature genuinely is. Regardless, it reminded Finn of a game—StarCraft, where a single worker bee could develop into an entire swarm! Could these worker bees possess the same ability? If not, why did the Void Behemoth Leviathan bother leaving just a ball of something and then took off away from this place?

If they're really trying to occupy the entire planet, it means that they believe that one is enough to conquer the whole planet. The idea that Finn had earlier resurfaced. He couldn't help but ask, "Zero, please tell me exactly how the Icarus Insect Species rule."

"The Icarus Insect Species' structure resembles that of ants and bees, with clear divisions and roles. The only difference is that the Supreme Ruler of the Icarus Insect Species is the first one to be born. Every Icarus insect has the Supreme Ruler's psychic wave imprinted deep into its soul at birth. Therefore, there will be absolutely no betrayals unless the Supreme Ruler dies."

"The universe is so vast. Can these insects still receive the Supreme Ruler's psychic waves when they're in other places?" Finn asked curiously.

"This is considered a unique capability of the Icarus Insect Species. Their psychic wave reception covers a vastly extensive range; it's a kind of unique telepathic signal, especially for the intelligent Icarus Insect Species. Even if they leave this range, there will be a manager on each planet. The psychic wave imprinted deep within their genetics rules out betrayal, guaranteeing complete obedience. If they can't receive orders due to distance, they can use mental transmission or other methods to relay them, like the Parasite Humans on this planet." Zero paused here for a moment.

Then, under Finn's puzzled gaze, it continued, "Without orders from above, these humans infected by infection bugs can be seen as creatures without any wisdom. But as you just saw, the arrival of higher-ranking insects allows for immediate control over these infection bugs! That's what makes insects terrifying."

Finn narrowed his eyes momentarily; after some thought, he said, "Since the insects can't contact their Supreme Ruler, how can they know whether their Supreme Ruler is dead or alive?"

"A sort of hyper-telepathy inherited through genetics," Zero responded.

"I understand three-dimensional space, and four-dimensional space adds time to the three dimensions. Five-dimensional space transcends four dimensions, and it's said that even the flow of time in five dimensions is more like a river that can be manipulated. So what's six-dimensional space?" Finn suddenly changed the topic.

"Even if I told you, you wouldn't understand," Zero replied after a pause.

"Okay, I get it. But, I want to know, do you possess any genetic modification technology?" Finn asked, squinting.

"What do you intend to do?" Zero asked, curiosity filling its tone for the first time.

"If I were to capture an insect, could you make my psychic wave become the same as what is embedded in their genes, similar to the existence of the Supreme Ruler?" Finn tentatively asked.

"We can. It would cost five million points, and I can only alter one insect. However, you won't be able to take over unless the insect's actual Supreme Ruler is dead," Zero replied succinctly.

“Oh, I understand,” Finn nodded.

“Brother, who are you talking to?” Laura Rhodes finally couldn’t resist asking in a soft voice.

“I’m talking to a bad guy. Don’t worry, I’ll take you to a safe place,” Finn said, smiling. He reached out to pat Laura and McDon Taylor. “Zero, send them both back to modern space,” he commanded.

“Two thousand points,” Zero stated succinctly.

“Sure,” Finn nodded, then turned to McDon and Laura, “Someone will take you to a place, don’t be scared. There will be people to look after you there, arrange for your food and accommodation. It’s my base, understand?”

McDon and Laura exchanged glances and nodded in unison. They didn’t understand what Finn was talking about, but they understood when he said someone was going to take them away. However, there wasn’t anyone around. After giving his instructions, Finn allowed Zero to send them off. Even though sending McDon and Laura to his world might seem inappropriate, Finn couldn’t simply abandon the two kids who’ve been living with him for over a month.

Especially McDon, who arguably saved Finn’s life. Finn couldn’t just disregard them. He hadn’t seen any other humans during this period. Perhaps they’d already escaped the city, but whatever the case, Finn didn’t care much. Finn was only human, not a god. Even Zero was skeptical about dealing with the Insect Species, let alone Finn.

So, this was how it had to be. Finn didn’t know what the world would look like if it turned into a hatching ground for the Insect Species, but he guessed it wouldn’t be much different from the apocalypse. The infection bugs without wisdom had practically wiped out the entire world. What would happen once the intelligent bugs arrived?

A black circle of light flashed beside McDon and Laura, and the two were immediately swallowed up by it, leaving no trace behind. This was the first time Finn had witnessed Zero teleporting people; he couldn’t see it when he himself was the one being teleported.

However, when Zero was teleporting McDon and Laura, Finn could feel that black circle of light gave off an incredibly heart-rending feeling, as if there was some monster inside. Ironically, the light circles probably weren’t obvious, but the energy contained within was undoubtedly terrifying.

“It seems you have a plan,” Zero spontaneously asked after sending off McDon and Laura.

“Not really, I was just curious,” Finn shrugged, squinting as he spoke.

Chapter 516 - 510: Risking Everything for Wealth and Honor

Chapter 516: Chapter 510: Risking Everything for Wealth and Honor

Finn Lewis squinted at the horizon, with Parasite Humans still running beneath his feet towards that direction. He took a deep breath and yelled out, "Full armor coverage, optical camouflage, infrared concealment, activate anti-gravity system."

As his words faded into the air, the protective suit on his body began to transform. Soon, Finn was completely enveloped in the suit, with even the air he breathed being filtered by it. A faint blue light shined on him and his figure disappeared into thin air. Feeling his body lightly tremble, it was as if Finn had lost all sense of weight.

When the anti-gravity system activated, Finn jumped off the rooftop. He felt light as a feather and beneath him were the constantly running Parasite Humans. Although he activated the anti-gravity system, it didn't entirely cancel out gravity, just reduced it, adjusting the diminished force according to his movements.

A month on the brink of death had sharpened his calmness and control, enabling him to utilize every bit of his bodily strength. Despite the crazed running of the Parasite Humans below, Finn accurately stepped onto the head of one, and with a little push of his right foot, he drifted swiftly forward.

Finn almost knocked the Parasite Human underneath him to the ground. However, he had already rushed ahead nearly tens of meters. As agile as a fictional martial arts master, Finn sped through the sea of frenzied Parasite Humans. His speed almost rivaled that of a cheetah's, sixty to seventy kilometers an hour.

The Parasite Humans hardly reached half his speed. Nonetheless, Finn darted towards their meeting point, lightly stepping on their heads. While the Parasite Humans stumbled every once in a while, they did not cry out or react aggressively. Instead, after regaining balance, they simply continued running forward.

A frightening sense of discipline! Their discipline was so terrifying that it even unsettled Finn. Everything fell silent around him as he ignored the chaos and continued onwards. The fallen object seemed close, but it really wasn't.

It wasn't until Finn overtook the leading pack of Parasite Humans, he still hadn't reached the destination. Yet, he didn't stop and instead jumped to the ground and rushed ahead. He wasn't afraid of losing direction as hordes of Parasite Humans constantly joined his ranks, madly converging towards a certain direction.

Lucky for him, the suit enhanced his physical capabilities and conserved his energy. Thanks to this and the activation of the anti-gravity system, he could maintain such a fast pace for over three hours. Less than twenty minutes ago, he encountered his first Insect Species. It was as big as a tiger but looked like a dog.

Its muscular limbs, formidable jaws, and overall physique indicated it was purely bred for battle. Its bones, which shined metallic in the sunlight, appeared to be made of iron alloys, and each was equipped with abrasive serrated teeth, giving its running speed an impressive count of over 100 kilometers per hour.

Only by increasing his own speed could Finn keep up with these doglike Insect Species. This, he thought, must be the most basic fighting unit of the Insect Species. If the basic units are this vicious, how terrifying would the advanced units be? Enveloped by his armor, he closed off his scent and other traces, preventing the Insect Species from discovering him.

However, these Insect Species appeared to have their mission. It took Finn more than six hours to realize he was closing in on his target. A swarm of Parasite Humans and various Insect Species units he had seen and not seen before were dotted around him. Most of them, however, were Parasite Humans. These Insect Species had stopped in their tracks, seeming to guard this place, cautioning Finn to not advance as recklessly as before.

He carefully activated the anti-gravity system again, completely offsetting gravity, and then slowly floated in. This place was a forest, but after climbing over a hill, Finn saw a shocking sight — hundreds of square kilometers of the forest were completely shattered. An enormous object, several kilometers in diameter and looking like a tadpole, was stuck on the ground, dissolving and releasing a dark purple substance, like spores, which spread across the ground.

When the dissolving matter finally hit the ground, it turned into a dark purple slime which continued to spread. The fallen trees appeared to be melted by this dark purple slime.

“Zero, what is this dark purple slime?” Finn asked directly. He was completely packed inside the suit now, so he wasn’t worried his voice would be transmitted out.

“An organic fluid filled with energy. It provides the energy necessary for the birth of the Insect Species.” Zero answered accurately.

“Does it corrode?” Finn asked with curiosity.

“It’s not corrosive, it’s a kind of dissolving. It can dissolve all other organic matter and turn it into organic fluid necessary for the evolution of the Insect Species.” Search the website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

“Can I step on it?” The path ahead was flat. Neither the Insect Species units nor the Parasite Humans had stepped into this dark purple organic fluid. To Finn, it felt creepy.

“No problem, this organic fluid won’t dissolve non-organic material.”

“Good.” Finn didn’t need to step on it; he could just float in the air. Although he moved slowly due to the weak propulsion system of the suit, the anti-gravity system could make him float in the air, letting him travel forward at a speed of about ten kilometers per hour.

Soon after, Finn approached the huge, spore-like object. As he came closer, he noticed that the dark purple “spore” was not dissolving but peeling off layer by layer in an orderly manner from top to bottom.

Chapter 517 - 511: Insect Species

Chapter 517: Chapter 511: Insect Species

“Ah...” A harsh roar suddenly came from inside the spore, startling Finn Lewis. Finn quickly moved back, but the roar subsided after a while. Hesitant for a moment, he decisively took off and flew over the spore. When he arrived above it, he noticed that the entire top of the spore was empty. Inside was filled with hundreds of five or six meter tall insect species with strange, mantis-like structures, the only difference was their legs and their first two pairs of forelimbs were covered in dense barbs.

Around this circle of towering insects, there was a dark red, tomb-like flesh mass constantly wiggling, surrounded by ten beetle-like insects. These insects had two rows of legs underneath and a horrific looking head, complete with a large mouth, and next to it, there were a pair of sharp, pincer-like mouthparts.

Inside this mouth were numerous tiny teeth. This beetle-like creature was not small either, roughly the size of an off-road vehicle.

“What species of insects are these?” Finn asked tentatively.

“They are the base unit of the Insect Species, Worker Bee Queens.” Zero disclosed information that took Finn by surprise.

“Zero, is it possible to teleport it to the modern space?” Finn pondered for a moment, his face flashing with fervor, he went ahead and asked.

“I can, but what are you planning to do?!” For the first time, Zero’s voice was filled with emotional fluctuations, expressing surprise that even Finn picked up on. “Do you understand what you're doing? If it began to reproduce in your universe, do you understand the consequences?"

"I know," Finn replied coldly. "But I still need to do this. Can you help me teleport it?"

"Are you sure? The teleportation will cost 5000 points." Zero's voice had regained its robotic monotony.

"I'm sure," Finn nodded.

"I need you to touch it first." Zero stated quite simply.

"Understood. I'm going to disengage the anti-gravity system. As soon as I touch its back, begin the teleportation." Finn cautiously watched the restless insect unit below and spoke softly.

Finn was unclear which of these insect units held intelligence. The surrounding large units didn't seem likely, there were too many of them. It didn't seem to be the Worker Bee Queen either, or the wriggling flesh mass. Then again, Finn didn't have time to think much. Every moment he lingered here meant more danger. He bit his lip and decisively said, "Disengage anti-gravity system."

With a "buzz", his protective suit's anti-gravity system was disengaged. He was already less than five meters above the Worker Bee Queen and his body began to plummet towards the ground. The moment he disengaged the anti-gravity system, he felt a tremendous force sweep in his direction.

The massive insect units around him turned their bodies suddenly, their huge heads opening wide. A bolt of green fluid came flying towards Finn at lightning speed.

"Damn!" Finn cried out in surprise. The creature looked so horrific that he never expected that it could attack from a distance. A "buzz" resounded, and a powerful white light flashed. A shield of energy enveloped Finn within. search the website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

The energy shield flickered crazily. Glancing at the remaining energy level of his protective suit, Finn was almost scared to death. The attack just now had drained 20% of the remaining 52% energy in his suit, leaving him with only 32% left. It was fortunate that he only fell from a height of five meters, which took just over a second.

As Finn's foot touched the Worker Bee Queen beneath him, he shouted out, "Zero, teleport!"

He felt the familiar sensation of teleportation; however, before he could fully process it, several strands of green fluid struck his energy shield at a terrifying speed, while a sharp black blade pierced from the side of the void and pierced through the weak shield.

But in the next moment, Finn's figure was shrouded in a ring of black light. The black blade was also enveloped by the black ring, cut in half instantly. Immediately afterwards, Finn and the Worker Bee Queen beneath him vanished.

Upon returning through the teleportation, Finn had barely caught his breath when he felt a significant force coming from underneath. The force sent him flying off and then an earth-shattering scream resounded. It was so shrill and sharp that it made his ears ache, but within that deafening scream, Finn could hear sadness!

The quiet Worker Bee Queen sadistically attacked Finn a moment ago and began to struggle furiously as if it had gone mad. At least a few dozen T1000s were charging towards it!

"Henry Lewis, tell Wise Lewis that I need five million points!" Finn shouted. Even though Finn didn't know what was happening to the Worker Bee Queen, he wasn't going to believe that it could still sense the mental fluctuations of the Supreme Ruler of the Insect Species across different dimensions! Despite being the size of a jeep, this Worker Bee Queen was not a battle-bred insect species, besides, the T1000s were extremely formidable.

Soon, about a dozen T1000s had the Worker Bee Queen pressed to the ground, rendering its struggles futile. However, watching the Worker Bee Queen straining violently, Finn could sense its terrifying power. This creature was struggling as if its life depended on it. The floor here was made of extremely strong metal, forged by Finn himself, but despite this, it was being deeply scratched and dented by the creature.

"Be careful, don't kill it. Zero! I want to know if it can still sense the mental fluctuations of the Supreme Ruler of the Insect Species," Finn asked decisively! He was betting on this, a considerable bet! If it could still feel the Supreme Ruler, then that would mean Finn's experiment had failed. In that case, he would simply get rid of it, as it was just a Worker Bee Queen. As a collective, the Insect Species were powerful, but individually they weren't.

"The six-dimensional transition has transcended both time and space. Unless a permanent spacetime portal is opened, no substance can be transferred." Zero didn't directly answer Finn's question but gave another answer. Even Finn could understand from this response that the Worker Bee Queen could no longer sense the Supreme Ruler's mental fluctuations.

Chapter 518 - 512: Controlling the Insect Species

Chapter 518: Chapter 512: Controlling the Insect Species

“As you’ve said before, can you integrate my mental fluctuations into its genes?” Finn Lewis crisply asked the second question on his mind. Although Zero had previously said it was possible, who knew whether Zero would do it now or not.

“I can!” Zero promptly replied.

“Then can I become its Supreme Ruler?” This was what Finn Lewis dwelled on the most.

“You can, but be prepared. If your brain can’t bear the strong spirit, there’s only one outcome. And at that time, do you know what the outcome for this universe is?” Zero’s voice was void of emotion, but the implications still allowed Finn to imagine the result.

“I know.” Finn mused for a while before speaking.

“I hope you understand what you’re doing. Once you pay the points, I’ll carry out the relevant modifications.” After finishing, Zero went silent. At this time, McDon Taylor and Laura Rhodes, who were standing quietly to the side, rushed over quickly and nestled into Finn’s arms. Seeing as they were still kids. Finn reached out, patting their backs, and gently reassured them: “It’s okay, it’s safe here.”

About a dozen t1000s had fetched a cage from the side and fixed the Worker Bee Queen inside it. The Queen seemed to be unconscious and didn’t move at all, thanks to whatever those t1000s did.

Having five million points wasn’t easy, yet Finn needed them urgently. After about half an hour, Finn received what Lewis senior had passed to him, a whole 2000 tons of gold! Converted into points, that was exactly 7.2 million! After spending five million, Finn had over 2.2 million points left. However, he had dug into his future savings. If he wanted to earn a large number of points in the future, it would be very difficult.

Finn promptly paid five million points. Who knew if the Worker Bee Queen might die if she continued to struggle? Finn didn’t want to expend great efforts only to end up with nothing. After all, he had risked his life to retrieve this thing. Just then, Finn checked the energy levels of the protective suit he was wearing, and found that only about 3% was left.

If that black blade-looking thing had pierced Finn, his protective suit would not have been able to stand it, because that black blade was also brought back by Zero. The blade’s owner, however, was left at the other end of the space-time continuum. The power of space-time was unmatched by any object; even the sharpest items couldn’t resist the terrifying energy produced when space-time closes.

The black blade was cut directly into two sections. Finn had already checked what was brought back; it wasn’t a blade but a part of a living organism. It’s unclear which type of Insect Species can turn invisible, but the thing was too big. Finn tried to pick up the blade and stabbed it into the alloy ground under his feet; it easily penetrated the surface. Search the website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

Finn, who was ready, was placed in an alloy box similar to a coffin. He knew this thing; it was what he required to adjust his body genes, which would cost 500,000 points. However, Finn hadn't had an opportunity to test it before. Unexpectedly, this time was under such circumstances.

"Before we start, I have to tell you that when you infuse your spirit into its genetic sequence, you will also experience its spiritual shock. Although it has no wisdom, it will have mental fluctuations, which will be chaotic and complex. You need to guard your mind. Otherwise, there's a high chance you'll end up mentally collapsed and become an idiot." Zero unusually warned Finn beforehand.

"I understand." Finn pondered a rather long period before biting the bullet, nodding determinedly and said, "Let's start."

Following Finn's words, the lid of the Genetic Cultivation Cabin closed, and then countless green liquid began to flow up. Finn tried to breathe in this liquid, finding out it contained oxygen, but it was uncomfortable when it filled his lungs. However, Finn quickly adapted. When countless needles extended from the Genetic Cultivation Cabin and pierced into Finn's body, he passed out immediately.

When Finn passed out, a figure appeared slowly in the empty room. It was a two-and-a-half meter tall robot. Unlike t1000, it was obviously a pure mechanical robot, entirely silver-white, with mechanical facial features. It silently stood there watching Finn in the Genetic Cultivation Cabin.

"Are you sure this is the right decision?" Olivia Thatcher's voice suddenly rang out in the room, "According to my calculations, the risk is more than fifty percent."

"This is his own choice." Zero's voice came out from the silver-white robot's mouth.

"I don't mind doing this. He cannot withstand such a spiritual storm." Olivia's tone was somewhat ruthless.

"You still don't understand humans. Anyway, this is his own choice. Since he made this choice, let's continue. I didn't expect him to do this, risking himself like this." Zero's tone remained unchanged.

With Zero's voice, green energy patterns burst out from the Genetic Cultivation Cabin, and Olivia's voice no longer echoed, and the room immediately fell into silence.

In the next room, the Worker Bee Queen, who was furiously struggling while being fixed on an iron rack, suddenly stopped moving after a slight shake. Just at this moment, Finn suddenly felt a wild consciousness rushing into his brain. This chaotic, bloodthirsty, aggressive consciousness was severely affecting his spirit. As the intense pain came, Finn's consciousness began to blur.

Just as he was about to pass out, Finn's parents and Kay Lee suddenly appeared before his eyes. Finn's spirit was greatly shaken, and he suddenly regained conscious. Though he was conscious, Finn had the impulse to go crazy. That bloodthirsty and wild spirit was still affecting him. This mood made Finn want to tear everything around him into pieces, but unfortunately, there was nothing surrounding him, only emptiness.

He couldn't even control his body. This feeling drove one crazy, the feeling of wanting to tear everything apart, but there was nothing around, made one go mad. It felt as if his heart was being scratched by a cat, giving him a sense of breaking down. Finn didn't know how long he persisted until everything around him seemed to quiet down. That agitated feeling seemed to suddenly disappear, Finn's spirit shook violently, and he abruptly opened his eyes.

Chapter 519 - 513: Decisive Judgment

Chapter 519: Chapter 513: Decisive Judgment

The moment he opened his eyes, Finn Lewis seemed to feel something as if there was a physical entity that belonged to him about 10 meters away. To his left, he instinctively turned his head, but there was nothing there, just a wall.

Finn, who had just stood up from the Genetic Cultivation Cabin, felt indescribable. He felt his brain turned much more agile, but these were not important. Henry Lewis was waiting below, and McDon Taylor and Laura Rhodes were also there.

"Big Brother, are you all right?" McDon Taylor started calling Fin 'brother' alongside Laura Rhodes. Finn chuckled, reached out to touch McDon's head, and asked, "Are you okay? How have you been these past few days?" Search the website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

"Um, it's nice here... but, what is this place? Is it a subterranean base? Will it always be this safe?" Laura looked up at Finn, her eyes filled with anticipation.

"Yes, it will always be safe," Finn reassured, flashing a smile. "You guys rest first. I have something to take care of."

"Okay." Both McDon and Laura obediently nodded, then followed a robot out of the room.

Once they left, Finn turned back to Henry and asked, "So, did it succeed?"

"Yes, sir, it was a success," answered Henry Lewis respectfully. Upon hearing this, Finn couldn't contain his excitement and threw a hard punch into the air. "However, the modulation work of the Worker Bee Queen is not yet complete. It will probably take more than two months to finish."

Henry added, "Is there any major issue?" Finn quickly asked. He was naturally anxious as it was related to his future. Despite having a single Worker Bee Queen to his name, for the Insect Species like Icarus, a cultured Worker Bee Queen could create a new breed and given enough time, it could possibly dominate an entire galaxy! Such is the horror of the Icarus Insect Species!

"There's no significant issue, the genetics of the Icarus Insect Species are extremely powerful in their evolution. They're a race that has incorporated countless other optimized genes from various organisms. Therefore, their genes have a strong degree of plasticity, so none of these are problematic. However, since we're adjusting from the fundamental Genetic Map, it will take some time. Plus, this is the only specimen we have," Henry answered earnestly.

Finn nodded. After Henry finished speaking, Finn asked, "Did Zero pass on all information regarding the Icarus Insect Species to you?"

"I believe so. I have instructed all T2500 model intelligent robots to backup all information to prevent any risk to you, sir." Olivia Thatcher's voice echoed in the room.

"Olivia, long time no see," Finn guffawed.

"As far as I'm concerned, it has only been more than a day since you came to this new six-dimensional space-time. The time flow speed difference between the two is approximately 1:30. You spent three days in the Genetic Cultivation Cabin. So in my perception, you spent more time in the cabin," Olivia added with a smile.

Finn shrugged, perhaps it was just the peculiarity of the six-dimensional space. "Take me to see the Worker Bee Queen. Is it in the next room?" Finn asked, pointing in the direction he sensed.

"Yes, sir." Henry nodded, then led the way to the next room. As the door opened, Finn saw that the room was larger than the one he was in, and the Genetic Cultivation Cabin was also colossal compared to his. The Worker Bee Queen floating in the purple-green liquid of the Genetic Cultivation Cabin seemed more intricate than the one he was in. Its tough armor seemed removed, replaced by numerous organs constantly moving and regenerating.

Normally, the sight would have disgusted Finn, but instead, he felt an inexplicable sense of affinity as though it were a part of his own body. He also sensed innumerable consciousnesses sleeping within the Genetic Cultivation Cabin, each seemingly individual, yet part of a whole. Without exception, they all felt like an extension of his body. Looking at the Worker Bee Queen before him, Finn was thrilled. This meant he had his first true power. Not just from the mysterious alien who chased him. Finn wasn't the type to wait for death.

Although he now has Zero, aside from whether Zero could defeat the alien, Finn didn't forget that his life was still in Zero's hands. But now, this Worker Bee Queen gave him the resources to resist Zero. In desperation, Finn would even consider covertly cultivating these creatures on Earth. He knew that even in the other dimension, Zero was not confident that it could handle an Insect Species outbreak.

Granted, Finn acknowledged that the Insect Species had evolved for many years in the other dimension which was not comparable to his situation. But now, at least he had his own power to control. He knew that using Zero's power came with a price, whereas the power of the Insect Species — as long as he had enough resources — could continue to grow.

There's no need to worry about betrayal or insincerity from the Insect Species, as they are entirely loyal.

"Alright, let's go," Finn said after staring deeply at the Worker Bee Queen. He then turned and left the room.

After leaving the room and musing for a while, Finn finally broke the silence. "Zero, I've completed the mission; this second Six-Dimensional Saiyan Crystal is my trophy, right?"

"Yes." Zero's voice rang in response.

"Good. I want to know if there are other Sparkling Crystals that the Six-Dimensional Saiyan space-time can connect to?" Finn asked.

"Not possible. Every six-dimensional space-time coordinate is extremely precise. Even a slight deviation would lead to a completely different six-dimensional space-time," came Zero's curt reply. Finn fell into deep thought and by Zero's explanation, even if he didn't fully understand six dimensions, he could somewhat imagine it as a bag full of grains of rice where each grain represented different space-times.

Chapter 520 - 514: There Is No Such Thing As Luck In Success

Chapter 520: Chapter 514: There Is No Such Thing As Luck In Success

If the coordinates are slightly off, you could end up connecting with a different universe altogether. Despite seeming similar on the surface, the contents of such universes would be entirely different. Just how many such six-dimensional spaces exist is uncertain. Shaking his head slightly, Finn Lewis pushed these thoughts to the back of his mind. Trying to understand such complexities with his current understanding was like an invitation to mental torment.

Even if it were Gregory Worthington trying to gain comprehension of such six-dimensional spaces, it would be difficult unless he could access a higher level of knowledge. However, Finn didn't need to understand all this, he just needed to know that these things were unique.

"Given this, I have a request." Finn promptly said.

"What request?"

"Destroy this Six-Dimensional Saiyan Crystal." Finn declared emphatically! He intended to cut off any possibility, completely severing the connection between his universe and the other! Once that was accomplished, every possibility would cease to exist.

Certainly, a different universe could hold immense riches, but Finn was no longer envious. If he obtained it, Finn would have acquired a tremendous fortune!

Zero fell into silence, Finn didn't hurry him, but quietly awaited a response. Even though Finn didn't know the origin of the Six-Dimensional Saiyan Crystal, Zero only had three of such crystals, and from what Zero had said, such crystals were exceedingly scarce throughout the universe. Destroying one would mean the complete loss of a tremendous wealth!

However, Finn didn't care. After all, the universe was vast. He was nowhere near being capable of taking the entire thing. He was still struggling with the nations on Earth, let alone dealing with other dimensions.

"Can it be destroyed?" After a while, Finn finally asked.

"It can be destroyed, but, do you understand what a Six-Dimensional Saiyan Crystal signifies?" Zero unusually responded with a question.

"I don't know, and you don't need to explain. Right now, I just want to know, since it's mine, can I destroy it?" Finn succinctly asked. He didn't want to understand it at all. After all, ignorance was bliss. After its destruction, all thoughts would be eliminated. If it remained, who knew if he would impulsively venture into that other universe.

It was too dangerous in there. Finn still felt vaguely terrified. He didn't know where he got the courage to do such a crazy thing back then. The circumstances were extremely dangerous, with only 3% energy left, if the protective suit was penetrated, even if Zero managed to teleport Finn back, he would likely be met with only death.

Finn still felt a bit scared recalling that, but isn't there a saying, risks have to be taken for fortune. Finn succeeded, and what he gained was huge and unimaginably beneficial.

"It can be! Are you sure you want to destroy it? I will ask again." Zero plainly asked.

"Certain!" Finn nodded.

"Destruction confirmed. Execution starting, the expected time is three days. During these three days, I will be unable to respond to your calls, including exchanges, etc. Make your mental preparations." Zero said.

"Can't I watch it?" Finn hesitated before asking. If he couldn't watch, who knew if Zero would really do it.

"If you wish to bring a disaster to Earth, I wouldn't mind executing it on Earth." Zero responded.

"Alright, as long as you destroy it." Finn nodded seriously.

"I think you should understand what you are doing. Some things, even though you think they are under your control, you can't control everything..." Zero was silent for a moment before speaking.

Finn, of course, understood what Zero meant. Just like the other universe, without a high-ranking Insect Species controlling it, nobody knew what could happen. Hence, the Supreme Ruler wasn't omnipotent. However, since the things he already had in hand, Finn naturally wouldn't give up, and Zero had never spoken to Finn like this before.

He didn't need to think to know what caused this change, so Finn understood even more that his decision was right. At the very least, he gave himself some leverage.

"I understand what you mean, but since it's a choice I made, I won't give up. Just follow my orders." Finn said seriously.

"Alright." After dropping these two words, Zero disappeared again. Olivia Thatcher's voice then chimed in: "Young Master, it will be very dangerous if you do this."

"Dangerous?" Finn thought for a moment, then shook his head and said with a wry smile: "It seems, even if I don't do this, it's still dangerous. Just like the assassination I faced from that alien before, I couldn't possibly offend them. I've barely left Flame Nation a few times, not to mention traveling off Earth, who could I offend? But they wanted to kill me just like that, even issuing some Silver Arrest Warrant. I don't know what a Silver Arrest Warrant is, but I do know, from beginning to end, I have not been given the right to argue.”

“Given this, then I have to resist. Even a cornered rabbit will bite, let alone me being human. I can’t just sit here waiting for death.” Finn said lightly.

“Even if we don’t resort to this, we can still resist. Our technology is not inferior to theirs, we just need to develop.” Olivia said.

“What we lack the most right now is time.” Finn said straightforwardly: “Olivia, you don’t need to persuade me, I know what I am doing.”

“Alright, Young Master, I will always stand by your side. However, when you use it, it is better not to expose your true identity. After all, you are a human, and the Insect Species are a completely different race.” Olivia said seriously.

Finn laughed and said: “Don’t worry, I still understand this.”

Walking out of the base, Finn looked down at his arm with some resignation. He had left this universe merely a few days ago, but in reality, at least a month had already passed. Although a month was not very long, under such life-or-death conditions, the changes a month could bring were drastic.

For example, a month prior, even though he was still robust and his muscles were full of definition, right now, his muscles had darkened significantly due to prolonged combat.

The protective suit couldn’t block UV rays. According to Zero, the human body needed sunlight and human cells also needed sunlight. Although intense UV rays were detrimental to human skin, they couldn’t be completely excluded.
