Chapter Ninety: Chatting Up Requires Skill

Turning the street corner, Finn Lewis finally took a deep breath. Holy hell! Man, he was so tense just now. Who knew chatting up girls was such a technical thing? He never found it difficult before. Although he couldn't be as suave as Prince – not a petal clinging despite passing through a field of flowers, Finn was not awkward either, so casual conversation was usually not an issue.

But just now, he broke out in cold sweat, realizing it only after he left the shop.

After Finn left, Kay Lee opened her mouth to call him but didn't. She muttered "Weird guy" and then sat down, starting on the cakes on the table. After all, her tummy had started rumbling. However, while eating, she kept thinking of that man as he seemed familiar.

At this moment, Finn was already waiting for Prince and Daniel Pan at the parking spot. From afar, Prince gave Finn a thumbs up before saying, "Nice job, perfect execution!"

"Perfect your sister! I was practically scared to death. Was I always this nervous talking to girls?" Finn laughed bitterly.

"Crap, are all girls the same? Besides, isn't she your dream woman? You don't see her as a woman; you see her as a goddess. How could you not be nervous talking to a goddess?" Prince sniggered, then hit the nail on the head. Finn rolled his eyes before asking, "What now? What should we do next?"

"Next? We wait for the next opportunity. You can't show up too often before her, even an idiot knows that would be suspicious. But don't wait too long either, or she'll forget the deep impression you originally made." Prince quickly snapped his fingers.

"Was the impression just now deep?" Finn asked, somewhat speechless.

“Of course! Do you know when one yields the highest efficiency in completing certain work?” Prince chuckled twice and quickly asked.

“When?” Finn looked at Prince, curious.

“When you’re holding in a dump or a piss, but can’t complete the work and can’t go to the toilet either.” Prince quickly replied.

“Damn! Aren’t you disgusting!” Finn rolled his eyes, but upon reflection, damn he’s genius, he wasn’t wrong at all.

“Similarly, when you’re hungry it’s the same. She must’ve been hungry, had her dinner at six in the evening, and had been shooting an advertisement the whole night without eating anything. Even Iron Man would be hungry now, and this is when one’s spirits would be most heightened. So, when you bring her food at this time, how can her impression of you not be deep?” Prince chuckled. “It does seem you have a bit of truth in there.” Finn scratched his chin, before asking, “Any scientific basis?”

Prince was a bit surprised, then rolled his eyes and scorned Finn, “Any of your sister’s scientific basis!”

Regardless, the first encounter had ended just like that. After parting with Prince and Daniel Pan, Finn drove home. On the road, being bored, he wanted to check his reward redemption menu on his phone but was driving at the moment. Finn started feeling irritated as he wanted to do something but couldn’t. It’d be great if the car could drive itself. As he stared at his steering wheel, an odd idea popped up in his head but was immediately dismissed.

Damn, others can’t do it, but I can. And when he got to that, there was a light in Finn’s eyes. He quickly asked, “Zero, you mean I can custom order for points, right? How many points do I need if I want to customize a car?”

“List the car functions you need.” Instead of saying whether it’s possible or not, Zero asked Finn to enumerate the functions, leaving him in awe. Damn, it’s really possible!

“Since your search ability is so powerful, you must know the film Lightning Ranger, the latest one. If I wanted a car that could match the standard in there, how many points would I need?” Finn asked, eyes gleaming. The things men love are just a few, guns, cars, women. Among ninety percent of men, these three would be in the top ranks. Unquestionably, the car in Lightning Ranger is every man’s dream car.

“1000 points.” Zero gave a number that was almost unimaginable for Finn. Of course, it wasn’t because the points were high but much lower than Finn had imagined. Finn thought such a car would need at least a few thousand points, but who knew it'd be only 1000 points.

“If you own a private car modification workshop, the points can be reduced.” Zero added something rare, and a light flashed in Finn’s eyes. A private car modification workshop wasn’t difficult; such a workshop wouldn’t need to be very big, so naturally, the expenditure wouldn’t be high.

“Or you could choose to redeem a blueprint, a customized car blueprint for just 400 points. If I was to provide the raw materials, that would be another 200 points making it a total of 600 points, but then you would require a handcraft car workshop.” Zero threw another bomb at Finn.

Now, Finn’s eyes were literally shining. Damn! It’s just 600 points. You know, Finn’s points had once reached that number before, but it was much lower than what he had imagined. But now, there’s a problem, that of a handcraft car workshop. Despite being described as a workshop, it’s actually equivalent to a small car manufacturing factory, and definitely wouldn’t fall short of the mainstream car assembly lines. This setup resembles some of the world-renowned branded cars, many of which were similar to this handcraft car workshop.

However, to Finn, this condition was quite restrictive but definitely piqued his interest. After driving back on the road, Finn’s head filled with the idea of points. But at the moment, Zero hadn’t given him a new task, especially those that could be completed in a short term. He did have a long-term task but the completion period of that was uncertain.

If Kay Lee was easy to pursue, who knows how many times she’d have been won over now? Finn couldn’t believe there weren’t rich guys who liked Kay Lee in this circle, but did they succeed? No! Therefore, this task, though it had 10,000 points, was definitely not something Finn could complete in a short time.

So if he wanted to earn points, he had to find other ways. Without thinking, Finn remembered a method he thought of previously, this illegal business. Although it’s illegal, Finn didn’t want to use it for evil deeds. Wasn’t he doing this to do good in the future? He made an excuse for himself..

Chapter 91: The Other Side of the Prodigal

Finn Lewis suddenly got motivated. Imagine having a car like the one in Lightning Ranger in real life, how awesome would that be? But what kind of car could reach that level? It's practically a godsend! In Lightning Ranger, a vehicle might be hacked and its functions cease to operate, but with a vehicle from Zero, would you need to worry about being hacked? At least Finn felt he didn't need to.

And a stylish car like this, if he could get one for Kay Lee, wouldn't that be better than any other gift? The gifts I give are all unique in the world, okay?!

Thinking of this, Finn immediately felt full of energy! But now there's a serious problem. As for doing illegal business, he had ideas in his mind, and he was sure he could make money. But now there's another problem: he is short of points! Finn promptly organized his points, and he currently had 250 unused.

Furthermore, Finn can borrow points from Zero. Zero had mentioned earlier that the standard for a loan was 1500 points, which meant that Finn currently had 650 points available. If he reserves 50 points, he still has 600 points to use. Six hundred points can be exchanged for quite a bit of money. However, there's an issue: money! Finn doesn't have enough money! Finn only has a bit over 30 million Flame Nation coins on hand now.

So, Finn needs a lot of money! After thinking about it, Finn asked again: "Zero, as you said, I cannot freely buy and sell my shares, but I can pledge them for a loan, right?"

"If a loan results in irretrievable shares, the corresponding points will be deducted accordingly," Zero didn't say if it's allowed or not, just warned Finn about the possible consequences.

Good! After getting this answer, Finn knew what to do! Since he can pledge shares, it's simple, if there's no money, go to the bank! Although Finn can spend Zero's funds on tasks at present, aside from task funds, he only has around 30 million left. Before, 30 million was an astronomical figure for Finn, but now... Finn could only say that 30 million is far from enough!

Especially when Zero would occasionally release some prodigal-like training tasks, Finn felt the pressure was huge. His living standard was raised to such a degree by Zero, he couldn't possibly just drive around in his Flying Horse and eat instant noodles whenever there was no task, right?

Let's do it! Finn gritted his teeth and made up his mind. Those who aspire to make a difference don't fuss over trifles. This matter... what the hell, he thought, and went straight to call Fishy Wells, regardless of it being after one in the morning.

Fishy Wells seemed to have got used to such interruptions from Finn. The phone was quickly picked up: "Sir, any orders?" Fishy Wells now found it easier to call him sir.

"Help me arrange a meeting with the branch manager of the Industrial Bank in Celeston City for tomorrow. Tell them I have a massive loan to discuss, nearly at least 300 million Federal coins." Finn didn't hesitate at all and said it straight.

"This... okay." Fishy Wells choked for a moment. She wanted to say, I was just a university student and had never even met other people, how could I possibly meet the branch manager of the Industrial Bank? But in the end, she remembered what Finn had said before, and agreed on the spot. After the call, she went to discuss with Julia Parker how to accomplish this.

After hanging up with Fishy Wells, Finn didn't think too much. These matters could be left to them. When he got home, Zoe was already asleep. Ruby Frank stayed at home putting Zoe to bed, but she was only sleeping on the sofa. Seeing Finn coming back, she quickly greeted him.

"Find yourself a room to sleep, you don't have to sleep on the sofa. Also, you should hire me a housemaid tomorrow," Finn thought for a while and said. If it was just him, it would be fine, but now there's Zoe at home, and there has to be someone to prepare meals on time. It's better to hire another person, as Fishy Wells and the others might have to deal with his affairs and not be able to take care of the child every day.

"Sir, let me take care of it. The people we hire might take good care of the kids on the surface, but what they do behind close doors is anyone's guess," Ruby thought it over and said.

Although Finn hired them as five assistants, in reality, they didn't have much to do every day.

Scratching his head, Finn suddenly realized how few people were actually available to help him, "Alright, you'll take care of it for now, and we'll see after I've completed the adoption procedures for Zoe." Finn thought about it and gave up, as he suddenly remembered, if he were to go home, he would inevitably bring his parents over. He believed that Zoe is thoughtful and his parents would definitely like her.

They would certainly be unwilling for Finn to hire a nanny or something, so let's wait until he's settled things with his parents. But, at the earliest, he could only go back during the summer vacation.

After instructing Ruby, Finn went straight to his room. There was a lot to do tomorrow, so Finn went straight to bed.

The next day, Finn was woken up early in the morning by a phone call. It was from Prince, "Mr. Finn, I forgot to tell you, there's an exam this afternoon, remember to come."

Finn was startled, then suddenly woke up fully, oh hell, he's still a student, how could he forget that? But Finn was a bit annoyed, because he had already planned out the next few days. And school exams couldn't be completed in one or two days, they usually took at least one to two weeks.

How about... calling Mr. Wood? Finn thought about it, picked up the phone, and called Mr. Wood. The call was quickly connected, "Finn, what's up?"

"Mr. Wood, the thing is, I have been quite busy recently, so I might not be able to make it for the exam," Finn hesitated, but still directly stated his purpose.

"Alright, I see. Look, Finn, you're so wealthy now that you could definitely disregard this university, but let me be honest, many people study for many years just for a good job, and you've already accomplished this task that many people can't complete in their lifetime. However, I hope that you will take your studies seriously. After all, only what's stored in your own mind is the most real thing and never expires." Mr. Wood thought for a moment and earnestly advised.

"Mr. Wood, don't worry, I will certainly complete my university studies with my own abilities." Finn didn't find it annoying and instead seriously said. Especially after Robert Thomps' incident, it made Finn realize that Mr. Wood is a good person, and Finn's mentality has also changed from before. Besides,

Finn really wants to graduate with his own abilities. Moreover, not only that, Finn also aspires to pursue a master's and doctorate degree. Being a top student is universally admired. Finn was almost a top student in high school, but now in university, where everyone is elite, Finn naturally desires to be a top student now more than ever!

With the Intelligence potion, is this still a dream? Over the past few days, Finn has discovered that although the Intelligence potion might not be as obviously beneficial as the Strength and Agility potions, it's evident in his daily life. Now, Finn can feel that his memory, comprehension ability, and so forth have significantly improved. Increasing his Intelligence by 2 points is equivalent to improving his original Intelligence by a fifth! This is an impressive figure..

Chapter 92: The Hidden Big Spot In the Country (Part 1)

When Matthew Chan received the call in the morning, he had found it somewhat unbelievable. However, his subordinates kept insisting that it wasn't a joke. Hence, he let his manager bring the person to his office. Upon seeing the young woman, Matthew Chan was taken aback. Just by her dress, he could tell that she probably wasn't bluffing.

Given Matthew Chan's daily interactions with the wealthy, he certainly wasn't mistaken about the price tag on this beauty's clothes. Especially the Breguet women's watch on her hand worth more than two million yuan, conveying her vast wealth.

"Ms. Wells, nice to meet you." Matthew Chan reached out his hand to shake the beauty's hand and smiled.

"Nice to meet you, Bank President Chan, I am Fishy Wells." Fishy Wells smiled slightly and began speaking. She had to admit, after spending so much time with Finn Lewis and witnessing so much, her heart had grown much stronger. Even when meeting someone like Matthew Chan, who she could never have met before, she remained calm.

"Ms. Wells, my subordinate just called and told me that you wanted to talk about a loan?" Matthew Chan tentatively asked.

"Yes, of course. Actually, I am not applying for the loan, I am here on behalf of our Young Master to discuss the loan with you," Fishy Wells replied with a smile on her face. Matthew Chan was taken aback when he heard the term "young master". Honestly, he was shocked. This was not an era of nobility, he never thought he would hear someone still being addressed as "young master".

Of course, in some affluent families, terms like "Young Master Lewis", "Mr. Wood", "Young Master Davis" are not uncommon. However, outright calling someone "young master" was rare.

"The loan can certainly be arranged, could you tell me whether you are considering taking a corporate or a personal loan?" said Matthew Chan, who was well-acquainted with these scenarios. Although he was taken aback, he managed not to show any signs of surprise.

“We are considering a collateralized loan with Industrial Bank,” said Fishy Wells confidently. Finn Lewis had previously informed her about this matter, and so she was not nervous. Search the website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

A collateralized loan? Matthew Chan’s smile grew even wider. Banks were never concerned about these types of loans because the collateral always exceeded the value of the loan. Hence these types of loans were most welcomed by banks.

“At least 300 million Federal coins. We plan to loan in Federal coins.” Fishy Wells said nonchalantly.

300 million Federal coins? Matthew Chan was shocked. Though Matthew Chan was head of a branch bank, this was a hefty sum for a loan. Yet, the Industrial Bank has provided several loans into the hundreds of billions, but those were primarily for very large corporations or state-owned entities. For a private secured loan to exceed 300 million Federal coins, was quite uncommon. Nevertheless, this isn’t the era of twenty years ago, the Flame Nation is not short of foreign exchange funds in Federal coins. Therefore, 300 million Federal coins meant nothing for Industrial Bank. Even as a branch bank governor, he could easily approve figures ten times this amount.

“May I ask what the collateral will be?” Matthew Chan asked curiously.

“Bank President Chan, that is beyond my area of knowledge, I am actually here to schedule a meal with you on behalf of our young master. He would like to discuss this matter with you himself, would that be acceptable to you?” Fishy Wells proposed.

“Of course, when is your master available?” Matthew Chan agreed immediately. No kidding, the loan amount is 300 million Federal coins, amounting to more than 1.8 billion Flame Nation coins. How could he pass on such a big deal? Every municipal branch has its own targets. Moreover, being able to lend them an item valued at 300 million Federal coins not only implies that this is a significant deal but also that Young Master may belong to a major family too! If he builds a good relationship and handles all their company’s operations, he might get an opportunity to be promoted to the head of Industrial Bank. “Today at noon. Can we go together shortly after this? Would that be acceptable to von?” Fishy Wells asked with a smile-

“Of course.” Matthew Chan was surprised but he did not refuse. Although it seemed sudden, he could not decline such a large transaction. So a short trip was not an issue.

By the time Fishy Wells made the call, Finn Lewis was already prepared. Despite not having contacted anyone about the loan yet, Finn Lewis knew that no bank would decline such a loan. Pulling the share certificate from his room’s safe, Finn Lewis walked out the door. Julia Parker drove, while Finn Lewis sat back and rested his eyes. Despite spending quite a while with Finn Lewis now, Julia Parker was astounded to learn that their Young Master was applying for a loan. Initially, Julia thought that Finn was just a rich second-generation kid. Although she hadn't heard of any wealthy individuals with the surname Lewis in the Flame Nation, the affluent here are known for their discretion. Therefore, the presence of wealthy individuals who seem rich but are not ostentatious was nothing unusual to Julia. But it now seemed that her master was more than just a prodigal.

The venue for the meal, while not the most upscale, was far from mediocre. Even Matthew Chan hadn't dined in such a place more than a few times. Don't believe everything you read in novels about high-ranking bank officials dining at ultra-luxury restaurants. If they were that extravagant, they would already have been investigated. Matthew Chan had visited upscale places, but most were just above average. By comparison, the place where Finn Lewis hosted the meal was quite upscale — a meal here would cost at least six figures. Even Matthew Chan hadn't dined in such places more than a few times.

Of course, even though he hadn't been there often, that didn't mean he was intimidated. Upon entering the private room, Matthew Chan saw a young man, no more than twenty-three or twenty-four years old, already seated. Beside him was a woman whose beauty competed with that of Fishy Wells. However, Matthew Chan paid them no attention. Beautiful women were always in abundance around the wealthy, and those Matthew Chan dealt with were inevitably rich.

"I presume this is Mr. Lewis," Matthew Chan said, reaching out with a smile to shake hands.

"Bank President Chan, I've heard so much about you," Finn Lewis said, somewhat sarcastically.

"Ha ha, Mr. Lewis must be joking. I'm sure before today, you hadn't heard of me," Matthew Chan said with a laugh. "I see Mr. Lewis is straightforward and doesn't enjoy making small talk. Just say what you need to say."

This guy is clever, Finn thought, unable to help but grin. Damn, these sly old foxes are never easy to handle. Moreover, this one's sharp eyes immediately picked up on the fact that Finn disliked making small talk..

“Bank President Chan, I’ll get straight to the point then, please sit down,” Finn Lewis pointed to a seat nearby.

“Julia, go order some food.” After Matthew Chan sat down, he instructed Julia Parker. Julia nodded and left, Fishy Wells stayed behind, Finn didn’t ask her to leave because the subsequent procedures still needed her to handle with the bank, Finn didn’t have the time.

“Bank President Chan, I won’t beat around the bush. I am a customer of your bank, however, this time I need a loan for some business ventures,” Finn Lewis began, “of course, President Chan, as long as you proceed normally it will be fine. We can discuss further how much collateral is needed, but my only condition is that the entire loan must be in Federal coins, and I would prefer it to be approved within two days. I don’t know if your bank can manage.”

“As long as the documents pass the approval process, we can provide the loan immediately,” Matthew Chan was very direct, typically, for such collateral loans, the complicated part lies in the review process. Once the review is done, the larger the amount, the quicker the loan. Everyone knows if someone borrows such a large sum, they must need it for something and don’t have the time to wait around.

“That’s great, the collateral I submitted can be assessed quickly, it’s the shares of some companies,” Finn proceeded confidently.

“Company shares, ” Matthew Chan echoed, his face showing a slight hesitation. Because evaluating company shares is really challenging. Whether it’s a publicly traded company or not, if it’s not listed, not only do they have to audit the company’s assets but also their profitability before they can reach a decision, and it’s even harder for publicly listed companies.

This is because many listed companies have artificially high stock prices, implying that the actual value of these stocks is quite tricky to calculate. So, despite Finn saying that the collateral is stocks, Matthew Chan was still moderately concerned. However, without seeing what company shares Finn held, he naturally won’t refuse outright.

Finn noticed the perplexed expression on Matthew Chan’s face, but he just chuckled, not saying a word. If even the shares he held could not be put up as collateral, Finn wasn’t sure what company shares could. So, he wasn’t worried at all.

He then started chatting with Matthew Chan about other topics. Soon, the table was laden with dishes. Given the circumstance, Julia knew what to order, not just the food, but also the finest wine. Of course, she didn't order too much because they were there for business, and drinking too much would not be appropriate.

When they were almost done eating, Matthew Chan asked, "Mr. Lewis, may I know the shares you wish to mortgage belongs to which company?"

"It's an overseas company," Finn said with a smile.

"An overseas company? If it's an overseas company, Mr. Lewis, you requested the funds to be approved as soon as possible. But if it's an overseas company, I must be frank, the process to vet and verify the documents would be truly complicated and would require some time," Hearing that it was an overseas company, Matthew Chan was even more unsure because there are countless companies overseas, who knows if this company is a shell company?

Investigating such a company would be time-consuming, so Matthew Chan gave Finn a heads up so that he wouldn't feel the wait was too long, "It's a well-known high-tech company, so you don't have to worry about not knowing its specific details. I guarantee you, the moment I divulge its name, you will know immediately. But my requirement won't change. The reason why I didn't approach the Rhine Kingdom Bank or the Red Flower Bank for this loan is that I trust your bank more," Finn said calmly.

When Finn said this, Matthew Chan was slightly surprised. According to Finn, he could easily take a loan from both the Rhine Kingdom Bank and Red Flower Bank; hence the company Finn was referring to was not a small one. Additionally, Matthew Chan understood that comparing to veteran institutions like the Rhine Kingdom Bank and Red Flower Bank, their bank was indeed a bit lacking in efficiency. Hence, Matthew Chan quickly responded, "Mr. Lewis, rest assured, as long as the company shares you wish to mortgage are high-quality stocks that can be reviewed easily, we promise to get the loan approved within two days."

Fishy Wells and Julia Parker, who had been eating next to them had been sneakily listening in the whole time. They were also interested to know the source of their boss's funds. search the website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

"Bank President Chan, do you recognize this phone?" Finn smiled, took out his mobile phone, and placed it on the table. Seeing the large screen phone, Matthew Chan's first thought was Samsung, but he immediately dismissed that idea because only one company had that iconic design: Fruit!

"This is...?!" Someone in Finn's position would naturally not use a counterfeit, so when he saw the phone, Matthew Chan was about to say 'Fruit', but suddenly realized; didn't Fruit just announce they would have a press conference in September for their new big-screen phone? Then this is...? "Fruit, the phone." Finn said calmly, looking at the stunned expression on Matthew Chan's face; Finn really enjoyed this triumphant feeling.

Although there was only one person, he was the branch manager of his bank; it was indeed shocking enough.

Indeed it's a phone, but wasn't it said that it hadn't hit the market yet? How could Finn have it? As soon as this thought entered Matthew Chan's brain, he couldn't help but think of another point. His emotions spiked instantly, however, he quickly calmed down. Because Fruit was a listed company anyone could buy Fruit shares from the stock market. If it was just over three hundred million Federal coins worth of Fruit shares, his bank would still need to evaluate as Fruit's market value fluctuated greatly, "Mr. Lewis, you can't mean the Fruit shares?"

"Correct, indeed it's the Fruit company's shares," Finn revealed with a slight smile, "And I hold 4.8% of the Fruit Company's shares," Finn dropped another bombshell.

"How much?!" Matthew Chan's eyes grew wide in shock. Matthew had suspected it was Fruit Company's shares, but he never thought that Finn held not just a few hundred million Federal Coins worth of Fruit shares – buying just a few hundred million Federal coins worth of Fruit shares is not an easy task itself.

But how much did Finn say he held? 4.8%?! Good God! As a financial expert,

Matthew Chan clearly understood what 4.8% of Fruit's shares mean. It means that Finn is Fruit's largest individual shareholder! It means that Finn's shares could rank in the top three amongst Fruit's major shareholders! It means that based on these 4.8% shares alone, Finn's personal assets are worth more than 30 billion Federal coins! It also means that if you wanted to acquire these 4.8%, you wouldn't be able to buy that much on the stock market!

Chapter 95 - 94 Face Swiping

Chapter 95: Chapter 94 Face Swiping

Translator: 549690339

"Mr. Lewis, you're not kidding?" Matthew Chan found his mouth dry, his voice somewhat hoarse, a hint of excitement colouring his face.

Sitting by him, Fishy Wells and Julia Parker were equally startled. They knew that Finn Lewis was wealthy, but they didn't imagine just how rich. 30 billion Federal coins? Converted to Flame Nation coins that amounts to a mind-boggling 1.8 trillion! It's counted in the billions! This thought made them look at Lewis differently.

No wonder he could afford to spend so generously just to hire a female assistant. They had thought him a spendthrift, but considering his vast wealth and their wages, it all seemed insignificant. Even if this 1.8 trillion Flame Nation coins just sat in a bank, it would generate an annual interest in the billions!

They couldn't calculate the exact interest amount, but the shock of all this was enough to stun them. They were coming to terms with the reality that the sum of their salaries over a hundred years wouldn't even equal the yearly interest on Lewis' wealth. How dejected should one feel about that? Search* The website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

With a crisp snap, Lewis took out the transfer document from his bag and placed it on the table. Matthew Chan didn't waste any time and immediately began reading the agreement, frozen in surprise when he realized the document he was holding was not a photocopy, but the original! Damn it! This document was worth billions of Federal coins and it was just sitting on the table?

Even though Chan was a branch manager at one of the world's largest banks, he found his composure wavering. His gaze fell upon Lewis, a man from the Flame Nation, and a question sprouted in his mind. When did someone from the Flame Nation manage to secure shares in a North Federation company?

And such a significant amount at that?

During a previous economic crisis, hadn't a company from the West Swallow tried to acquire the vehicle brand, Hummer, from the North Federation, but failed? The failure was not solely due to other factors, but mainly because the North Federation's official policy didn't allow foreign entities to purchase such assets, since Hummer, apart from being a car brand, also supplied a lot of military armor vehicles to the North Federation Army.

It was the same with the company Apple. The world's top valued company doesn't just let anyone purchase their shares, let alone a significant stake that includes a position in their board of directors. Matthew Chan had no idea how Lewis managed it. He could only conclude that Lewis was extraordinarily impressive.

After quickly scanning the document, Matthew Chan was convinced of its authenticity. As a bank executive, it was easy for him to verify such documents. Now, all he had to say was, "Mr. Lewis, a 300 million Federal coin loan won't be a problem."

"However, I have one question," Chan hesitated before saying.

"Go ahead," Lewis nodded.

"It seems from this document that your shares cannot be transferred?" Chan enquired.

“Indeed, these shares cannot be transferred, but they are in my name. So I wonder, will you offer me a loan or not?” Lewis replied with a smile.

Matthew Chan began to contemplate. Collateral loans, like the one involving share collateral, would usually involve signing a contract with the bank. The contract stipulates that if the borrower fails to repay the loan within the agreed-upon term, the collateral shares would fall into the bank’s ownership. Every banking conglomerate has stakes in numerous companies, some as part of their investment portfolio, others due to defaulted collaterals. So it’s common knowledge that Floral Wealth Group, one of the top ten financial groups in the North Federation, is not just the Red Flower Bank.

Red Flower Bank comprises less than one-twentieth of the group, yet the group has expanded significantly due to the bank. Similarly, ICBC is moving along the same trajectory. Indeed, every bank inevitably faces this process. However, the shares in Lewis’ possession were special, they couldn’t be transferred.

That means the bank couldn’t sign the usual collateral contract because they couldn’t take over Lewis’ shares. This raised a problem for the bank; it seemingly lacked any security. The way Lewis asked the question was interesting; would you give me the loan? Lewis was offering no collateral to the bank. Even the shares he held couldn’t be used as collateral since they were non-transferable. Tossing the transfer document to ICBC made no difference. Without Lewis’ signature, the bank couldn’t claim the shares.

In simple terms, Lewis was asking for a loan based solely on his reputation. And surprisingly, banks feed off such situations. They are aware that the client has the ability to repay. The shares could not be transferred, but the client’s repayment capacity was beyond doubt. The question now was, would they lend money to such a high-quality client? We are not just talking about this loan; it’s a matter of future collaborations!

Moreover, Matthew Chan was well aware that if the loan application were presented to a Rhine Kingdom Bank or Red Flower Bank, it would certainly get approved. The approved amount would even exceed the 300 million Federal coins. This was the difference between domestic and foreign banks!

“I need to report this first. However, Mr. Lewis, you can rest assured, we will respond to you as soon as possible. We should have an answer by this afternoon. But I need to make a copy of this document,” Chan finally said after much thought, standing firmly..

Chapter 96 - 95: Successful Face Scanning

Chapter 96: Chapter 95: Successful Face Scanning

Translator: 549690339

Matthew Chan had returned to the bank for consultation, and naturally Finn returned home too. However, both Fishy Wells and Julia Parker were somewhat dazed on the journey; today's lunch had sent quite the shockwave through them. Finn was fairly relaxed as even if the Bank of China did not provide the loan, he could always go to Red Flower Bank or the Rhine Kingdom Bank, confident that he could definitely get the loan.

But Finn really didn't want to seek help from those foreign banks because he did not wish to get on the radar of certain intelligence organizations.

Thus, that's why Finn approached the Bank of China at home. After all, he had plenty of ways to deal with any homegrown scrutiny, and the domestic authorities were not as intrusive as those in North Federation.

Finn was quite relaxed, but the situation was anything but relaxed within the Bank of China. As soon as Matthew Chan returned, he immediately reported the matter to the headquarters of the Bank of China and a board meeting was called without delay. Three hundred million federal coins were by no means a small sum; even the wealthy Bank of China couldn't ignore it. The most critical issue was the company shares deposited as collateral by Finn, which had one problem; they were non-transferable. Whether to grant Finn the loan or not was really a conundrum.

However, the Red Flower Bank and Rhine Kingdom Bank, mentioned by Finn during his lunch with Matthew Chan, left the directors of the Bank of China in deep thought for quite a while. The reason was simple: they were all from the financial sector and they knew that if the company shares held by Finn were domestic, then neither Red Flower Bank nor Rhine Kingdom Bank may bother. But now, the shares that Finn held were not domestic, but of the world's largest corporation!

That carried significant weight! They all worked in the same sector, so they knew, be it the Rhine Kingdom Bank or Red Flower Bank, they would be very much interested in Finn's high-profile approach. Not because it was insignificant, but because it had considerable power in North Federation. Even if Finn's shares couldn't be transferred, they wouldn't worry about not recovering the investment. After all, no matter how long, the shares in Finn's hands wouldn't significantly decrease in value.

So the problem was, if they didn't accept this order, undoubtedly, Finn would go to the Red Flower Bank or the Rhine Kingdom Bank and unquestionably, Finn wouldn't choose the Bank of China for any future cooperation. If the customer needs help and you fail to provide it, do you still expect to use the customer's money to make money? Who would be so stupid and let someone play this trick on them?

“Lend him the money! But we keep this document under our care until he repays the loan.” In the end, the Bank of China decided to proceed with this loan; they had no choice as the circumstances Finn had created were intimidatingly impressive.

When Finn received the call, he was still at home, and only three hours had passed since lunch. “I’ll go through the procedure tomorrow, thanks in advance, Bank President Chan.” After the pleasantries, Finn said laughing.

“Alright, Mr. Lewis, you’re too kind. Any bank would welcome a client like you,” Matthew Chan replied, laughing. Since the higher-ups had already agreed, there wouldn’t be a problem with selling a good point to Finn now.

A loan of three hundred million federal coins was just arranged like that, and it was all thanks to Finn’s great reputation. Although the original share transfer document had to be kept at the Bank of China, this wasn’t a problem at all for Finn. He would have been worried about keeping it at his home in case a thief broke in and stole it. Now, it was effectively being stored for him. If they lost it, Finn could even claim a compensation.

Finn saw no reason not to proceed with this win-win situation. After hanging up the phone, the few women around him had naturally overheard the conversation. Fishy Wells stuttered and asked: “They agreed to it?”

“Why wouldn’t they?” Finn asked playfully, his mood soaring! With this money, he could do a lot of things! First of all, acquire a batch of points, which was the most important thing. As long as he got his hands on the first batch of points, Finn’s business could rapidly develop from there, and he could live extravagantly, no matter how much he spent he could never exhaust his wealth. You must know, Finn had a lot of dreams yet to be accomplished!

Finn’s question left the women speechless. They couldn’t comprehend why the Bank of China agreed to this. Finn was basically flaunting his status! There was no collateral at all! Why would they lend money to Finn?! This wasn’t three hundred thousand, or three million, but three hundred million! And it was in federal coins too!

Actually, it wasn’t much different from auto loans and mortgage loans; all Finn had to do was prove his ability to repay. The digits were just bigger, and the repayment period was a bit longer, but none of that mattered. Sure, auto loans and mortgages have collateral, Finn simply didn’t have any.

“Alright, I will be rather busy in the next few days and may have to go abroad for a while. You guys just need to take care of Zoe these days. If something comes up, I’ll get in touch,” Finn said. The things that he had to take care of next were quite dangerous, so he decided not to bring them along.

The girls nodded in agreement, naturally, they wouldn't object to Finn. With the Bank of China situation settled and Finn going ahead with the procedure tomorrow, the required funds would then be transferred to Finn's account promptly. As for other matters, Finn need not worry at all. The speed of zero transfer, presumably only a few people worldwide would be able to trace it.

After explaining everything to the girls, Finn picked up his phone and dialed Luca Hall, "Hi boss." Luca had returned to North Federation to take care of some follow-up matters for Finn, but Finn had already hired him, though he needed to pay Luca's salary himself.

"Hmm, I may have to go to North Federation and Great Britain for some work. How long will it take to get my passports ready?" Finn didn't bother with any other rubbish or ask about any other matters. If Luca couldn't handle mundane things that any normal person could handle, there was no point in hiring him.

"Boss, give me three days." As expected, Luca understood exactly what people like Finn needed; the most professional service and quickly answered confidently.

"Excellent, do you need anything from me?" Finn nodded satisfactorily and asked.

"No need, I have most of your details here.."

Seeing Luca Hall in action made Finn Lewis realize what professionalism looked like, something his female assistants couldn't match. Having gone to university, Finn's residence was transferred to city S. He had never intended to return to the countryside, so he'd moved all his documents to the city, including his passport. For the passport formalities, Finn didn't personally know anyone so he entrusted Matthew Chan.

Getting Finn a passport in a day's time was a simple task for Matthew. So, by the third day, Finn received calls from the embassies of the North Federation and Great Britain, asking him to process his visa.

For the entire European Union, if Finn could simply process the visa for one country, he could enter all other member countries without one. On the fourth day, Finn was on a plane to Burma. As he stared at the changing landscapes below, his emotions fluttered.

Finn was not just traveling for leisure – any small misstep could potentially lead to danger.

Fortunately, with Zero's protection, he was a bit relieved. However, in Burma, particularly in the notorious Golden Triangle, previously being a student, he couldn't afford to relax. It took less than an hour to fly from Celeston City to Burma. Thankfully, Finn's previous education, complemented by his major in computer science, allowed him to speak the Federation's language passably.

Had that not been the case, he would've had language problems upon landing.

Zero could provide translation services, but they came at a cost! Finn didn't want to unnecessarily waste his points. Sitting in a rickety car, Finn was left astounded. To think it was due to his fancied customized supercar that he ended up here. As he got closer to his destination, he felt increasingly uneasy.

It wasn't until Finn reached a small town in Kachin State that he relaxed a bit. Not because it was safe here. On the contrary, it was quite dangerous as this village lies right in the Golden Triangle's territory. What relaxed Finn was the fact that he'd triggered Zero's protection mechanism.

Right before he entered the town, twenty sturdy men protecting Finn appeared. They brought along five utility vehicles that resembled the Flying Horse G65. However, once inside, Finn knew this wasn't your everyday G65 – it was likely just the exterior that Zero imitated. Search the website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

With these men around, Finn let out a sigh of relief. A convoy like theirs was bound to draw attention in a small town, however, most residents only offered a cursory glance, and directing their attention elsewhere until a beautiful woman approached Finn.

"Honoured sir, may I help you with something?" The beautiful woman spoke in flawless Flame nation language, causing Finn to narrow his eyes. Clearly, the power behind this region was aware of Finn's arrival and his Flame nationality. However, they wouldn't uncover Finn's real identity as he'd spent fifty points to get Zero to handle all the video footage and other information left in Burma.

This was also considered a part of protection measures, which is why Zero only charged half. Otherwise, the number of points needed would have tripled.

To sum it up, our protagonist Finn, head to Burma's Golden Triangle, made some purchases, and then dealt with Great Britain.

In the process, Finn gained a lot of points, and outsmarted the British officials' organization. Some British underworld forces, unexpectedly acting shamelessly, were left shattered after the robots summoned by Finn.

Owing to circumstances, these plot points have been edited out. We apologize for disappointing readers.

With Zero handling things, Finn didn't need to worry anymore. Sitting in his hotel room, he summed up his earnings from the week. From the time he left his country until today, less than a week had passed. During this week, he made a whopping 780 million Federal coins. Adding in the 300 million Federal loan from the Industrial and Commercial Bank of China, his total assets exceeded 1 billion Federal coins!

Not only had he accumulated around 800 million Federal coins, but his strength and agility had also reached 20 points, and his intelligence had hit its peak at 18 points! He was both proud and thrilled because his 'little buddy' was now equivalent to that of Federation men. However, he wondered when the restrictions would get lifted – he could see but couldn't use it!

Every time was reminded of his now potent 'little buddy', Finn felt desolate. Besides, he now had two T800s. Though it pained him to exchange these, he didn't feel much remorse once it was done because he could freely use them. Two T-800s were a big deal! He also managed to exchange them for a Mirage I-Series game engine.

Also, he had about 13,000 points in hand. It was a huge fortune. If used properly, Finn could earn points continuously.

Summing it up! After organizing his assets, Finn punched the air in excitement, shouting, "I'm rich again, I can behave recklessly now!" He didn't dwell on the deals he had made. He initially hadn't planned to conduct business for too long; it was just a means to an end. And now that he was rich, it was time to spend some money.

Lord knows what Alan Andrews would think if heard about Finn's current mindset. Their side had already escalated the situation to a certain alert level, but they didn't expect Finn to forget about it all so soon. How could one tolerate this?

After sorting out his possessions, Finn wasted no time in calling Fishy Wells. The call was answered quickly, "Hello, young master."

"Hmm, it's me. How have you all been? How is everything at home? How's Chloe?" Finn inquired, having not been in touch with home for a while. But he had taken care of his school leave, and had also informed his dorm mates that he'd be busy for a while. Fishy and the others weren't much concerned as they were just his assistants.

"We're all doing good at home, and so is Chloe. She says she misses you though," answered Fishy.

"Alright. For now, leave Chloe with the others. I need two people, who are good with business negotiations and speak the Federation language, to make a trip to the Southern Federation. Have you all processed the passports and visas I asked you to?" Finn asked..

"Everything's done." Fishy Wells immediately nodded in agreement. With the financial proof provided by Finn Lewis, obtaining visas for any country was quite simple. Therefore, the passports and visas for Fishy and the others have been processed.

"Good, please decide as soon as possible, and give me a call once you've decided. If it's for tomorrow, you guys can fly straight to Germany." Finn pondered a bit before saying.

"Yes, young master!" Fishy Wells agreed and quickly nodded in consent.

With everything set except for the opportune moment, Finn naturally wouldn't forget about his most desired course of action: to create a super impressive car of his own. In fact, he had already arranged for the car's emblem. Admittedly, Finn had decided this automobile isn't for the market to buy. Ultimately, acquiring the private car production workshop was to create cars for his personal use! search the website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

In terms of a zero-requirement type of personal workshop, there were only a few worldwide. Among them, Flying Horse, Volkswagen, and Eldora were undoubtedly Finn's top choices. Germans are top-notch in the field of mechanical manufacturing worldwide, so naturally, these were under the spotlight for him. Volkswagen, the largest car company in Germany and the second-largest worldwide, was Finn's first target.

Yes. you read that correctly. Germany's largest car company is not Flying

Horse or Eldora, but Volkswagen! When most people hear the name

Volkswagen, they picture ordinary family cars. However, the Volkswagen

Group owns many well-known brands such as Lamborghini, Volkswagen, Lamborghini, Bugatti Veyron, Ice Horse, Porsche, SEAT, Skoda, Scania and others. From family cars to luxury vehicles to sports cars, Volkswagen has all kinds of cars in its product range.

Volkswagen Group has numerous private manual workshops that meet Finn's criteria. Even though both Flying Horse and Eldora produce luxury cars, they are also engaged in aviation engine production. The technical strengths of these two companies are undoubtedly esteemed. But these capabilities are not what Finn needs, and even if needed, they would not sell.

What Finn needs is their manual production workshop and their skilled workers and engineers! Other things, like blueprints provided by Zero, are what Finn does not need at all. As for raw materials, Finn had already clarified with Zero. All these materials can be produced with the current earth's technology level, although it has not yet been discovered, and the conditions for production are quite harsh. The production is certainly feasible, but the cost would be high.

Conditions for large-scale production are not yet mature, and it can only be experimentally produced in a laboratory. However, the cost of car raw materials produced in this method would exceed 200 million Flame Nation coins! This is only for raw materials! It doesn't include the costs for processing raw materials or other aspects such as circuit designs. Luckily for Zero, these things were not valuable.

So, Finn thought that after the new semester begins, he should systematically learn about this field. Because he discovered that many things in Zero's possession cost very few points, but these items are indeed very high-end technologies on Earth. On the other hand, some items with high prices on Zero could actually be resolved by Earth technology.

These are the inconsistencies created due to the disparity in strength between both parties. But now, since Finn had quite limited knowledge in this field, he wasn't able to take a complete measure of this yet.

Once he had finalized his itinerary, Finn went to sleep. Before Finn fell asleep, Fishy Wells called to confirm their flight to Germany. By the time Finn flew to Germany tomorrow, they should have arrived. This was because they caught the earliest flight, leaving just a few hours later.

Germans' precision and rigidity are highly compatible with mechanical manufacturing, hence their exceptional achievements in this field make the world take notice.

Even though Germany may not be the world's largest auto seller, it certainly sets the standard in the automotive industry. By the time Finn landed at the airport, Fishy Wells and Julia Parker were already there to receive him. Despite him having advised them to rest at the hotel first, seeing as they'd arrived about three hours earlier than him.

However, it seems that they didn't do so. "Young master, the hotel arrangements are complete. It's the best hotel in all of Berlin. We've already contacted Volkswagen, but it seems that they're not very enthusiastic about our acquisition proposal." Fishy Wells quickly reported.

“Hm.” Finn nodded, then looked towards a middle-aged man standing nearby, asking, ‘Who is this?’

“Hello, Mr. Lewis. My name is Truman Dale. I’m an expert in German law and a translator.” While his Flame Nation language carried a slight German accent, Truman spoke quite standardly.

“Oh, hello.” Finn was quite pleased with the amount of work Fishy Wells and Julia Parker had accomplished in just three hours. It seemed they were beginning to adjust to their professional roles.

As Truman spoke, he discreetly observed Finn. He clearly understood from her address of him as ‘young master’ in the Flame Nation language that Finn was of noble descent. Yet from his demeanor, he seemed far from aristocratic.

Truman imagined the term ‘young master’ as equivalent to a noble heir in the Southern Federation.

Up until now, Truman had no idea what Finn’s intentions were in Germany. Although, he had completed his tasks, which involved contacting Volkswagen and expressing the intentions of his client: to acquire a car manufacturilu factory under Volkswagen. However, Truman wasn’t particularly hopeful about his client’s plans. Had it been during the financial crisis of 2008 or 2009, when global car manufacturers faced capital shrinkage and market retraction, there would’ve been a chance. Despite this, Truman’s job was purely legal and linguistic; he was a commercial lavvyer and translator in Germany..

Chapter 99 - 98: Prodigal Son

Chapter 99: Chapter 98: Prodigal Son

Translator: 549690339

Finn Lewis glanced at Truman Dale and then asked, “Is this car rented?”

“Yes.” Finn Lewis’s tone made Fishy Wells and Julia Parker feel a little uneasy, weren’t they satisfied yet? They had already chosen the best car to rent.

“First, take me back to the hotel. Once at the hotel, you and Mr. Dale go out and buy a ‘Phantom’ to use for my few days in Graham Kingdom,” Finn Lewis said casually.

As he was preparing to step down to the driver's seat, Truman Dale stumbled. He almost fell flat on the ground. He knew about the this man's background, it was his first time in Graham Kingdom, but... You're only in Graham Kingdom for a few days, and you're specifically going to buy a 'Phantom'? Although the term 'prodigal' doesn't seem to exist in Graham Kingdom's vocabulary, similar phrases do. Clearly... Finn Lewis had made a deep impression on Truman Dale.

Finn Lewis ignored Truman Dale's reaction, but a thin smile curled on his lips.

To achieve some goals, one must first demonstrate their strength. Anyway, Finn Lewis was making money too easily now, it would be better to spend it quickly.

"Okay." Fishy Wells and Julia Parker exchanged glances before speaking with somewhat bitter expressions. Truthfully, the two women could not keep up with Finn Lewis's pace. If he was a prodigal back home, they could understand it; After all, the car could still be driven, right? Even if they had once smashed a car worth more than forty million yuan, but the money was paid by someone else. Although it was prodigal, it was not Finn Lewis's own money, so they didn't feel bad about it.

But now, just a few days in Graham Kingdom, and he's going to buy a Sëarch* The website to access chapters of novels early and in the highest quality.

'Phantom' worth tens of millions? If this wasn't prodigal, then what was it?

After getting in the car, Truman Dale acted as the driver. Finn Lewis did not know how much salary Fishy Wells and Julia Parker had offered to make him willing to do this job. He did not ask about this, but directly said, "Mr. Dale, I want to meet the person in charge of Volkswagen as quickly as possible. How soon can you make it happen?"

"Mr. Lewis, I can arrange it as soon as possible. However, even though I don't know why you would want to buy a car manufacturing plant, Volkswagen doesn't lack funds at the moment, and doesn't have failed assets either. Therefore, I believe that buying from them may be difficult," said Truman Dale after choosing his words carefully.

Finn Lewis didnt mind Truman Dale rejecting his opinion. In fact, Finn Lewis had just asked Fishy Wells and others to buy a 'Phantom' in front of Truman Dale to confirm his strength and to prove his ability to Truman Dale, as he had noticed some interesting things about this middle-aged man.

"Hmm, I see." Finn Lewis just replied and then fell silent, closing his eyes to rest. Truman Dale wasn't sure what to say next, holding back what he had originally wanted to say.

When they arrived at the hotel, Fishy Wells and Julia Parker had arranged the best presidential suite for Finn Lewis. It seemed that the two women had also caught on to some of Finn Lewis's style. After entering the hotel room, Truman Dale excused himself. However, instead of going home, he stayed in a hotel room downstairs in case Finn Lewis would summon him at any time.

"What's his background?" asked Finn Lewis directly once Truman Dale had left. "He's the chief lawyer of RAUPACH&WOLLERT, the largest law firm in Graham Kingdom. He has a PhD in Law and a PhD in Foreign Languages from Bean City University in Graham Kingdom. He is proficient in German, Flame Nationese, Federation Language, and Spanish. He's a very famous lawyer across the whole of Graham Kingdom." Fishy Wells quickly recounted this man's details, and Finn Lewis immediately laughed.

Finn Lewis couldn't help but feel a bit proud. When he had gotten off the plane, he noticed the Breguet watch on Truman Dale's wrist, the same brand he was wearing. Although Breguet is cheaper in the Southern Federation than in his own country, luxury items are considered luxury items worldwide. Only people with a high income can afford Breguet. He doubted even someone with an annual salary of a million Federal coins could really afford it. But Truman Dale's clothing was very plain. Anyone who could afford to wear Breguet watches could definitely afford nice clothes.

That could only mean one thing: he was being low-key to avoid overshadowing his employer. Anyone with such a vision would naturally not be small-minded, and in a field like law where high income implied that this person knew a lot of people! This was why Finn Lewis decided to show his financial strength in front of him.

Finn Lewis would never have had such observational power before. This observational power emerged unexpectedly: bluntly, it was a side effect brought about by the increase in Finn Lewis's intelligence. Just before coming to Graham Kingdom, the previous night, Finn Lewis couldn't sleep so he spent nearly a thousand points to increase his intelligence to 20, and his strength and agility each to 21, surpassing the standards set by Zero for ordinary people.

After his intelligence rose to 20, Finn Lewis found that the term 'intelligence' could only be described as general. The benefits it brought were enhancements to his memory, observation, analytical ability, strong learning ability, and acceptance among other things. This feeling was intoxicating. Finn Lewis even felt it was more intoxicating than his current physically strong body that could beat a bull to death.

This feeling of control, that everything was under your analysis, was absolutely attractive. No wonder so many people were obsessed with power. The higher the position, the stronger the sense of control. This sense of control was addictive to everyone. Only those who have experienced it can understand its charm.

Even on a whim last night, Finn Lewis had picked up a Federation Language and German dictionary, and had found some German textbooks online to learn. Just one night, and although Finn Lewis didn't dare to say he was fluent in German, he certainly had no problem with basic German conversations. On the plane, he listened to the locals from Achievement Country, pondering in his heart. He was sure that if he started a conversation with someone from Achievement Country, he would definitely be praised for his good German.

After his guess was confirmed from Fishy Wells and the others, Finn Lewis's mood instantly brightened. And there was no doubt that by showing Truman Dale his financial strength, Finn Lewis believed he could definitely contact these people. There was also another point: Finn Lewis liked Truman Dale as a person. Of course, don't get the wrong idea. Even if Finn Lewis became gay, he wouldn't be interested in a middle-aged man..

Chapter 100 - 99 Brother Fei to the Rescue (Part 2)

Chapter 100: Chapter 99 Brother Fei to the Rescue (Part 2)

Translator: 549690339

The experience listed on Truman Dale's resume clearly indicates that he is a top-notch professional who is well-versed in law. He is an extremely suitable candidate for Finn Lewis, if he chooses to buy a handcrafted car manufacturing shop in Achievement Country. Undoubtedly, he would need someone to testify to this purchase on his behalf. Considering how, from the first time Finn met him, Truman displayed a clear understanding of tact, by skillfully grabbing the attention of his potential employer, Finn had no doubt that Truman was the right man to handle this task.

This was just the kind of person Finn needed! After discussing things with Fishy Wells inside the room, Finn instructed Fishy Wells to call Truman Dale back. There was no hint of disappointment on Truman's face when he was called up again a few minutes after returning to the room. Once he entered the room, he respectfully greeted Mr. Lewis.

It must be said, that the federal people, in this respect, were utterly professional and respectful to their employers, as was evident from former cases like Luca Hall's. They were shrewd and incredibly smart, knowing exactly what kind of person they needed, and precisely when and what actions needed to be taken.

"Mr. Truman, you mentioned during our ride that Volkswagen is not a great choice. I understand that you have a better recommendation in mind. Could you share it with me?" Lewis went straight to the point.

Taken aback, Truman hadn't expected Finn to ask such a question. Despite having better options in his mind, he didn't anticipate that Finn, perceived as a prodigal, was capable of showing such insight or reaction. From Truman's experiences with many like him, and from the journey from the road to the hotel, he had branded Finn a spendthrift and a prodigal son. He had absolutely not anticipated Finn's response or level of insight.

In the car on the way to their destination, Truman had meant to share his thoughts, but Finn had simply brushed them off. This had led Truman to believe that this employer of his just didn't get what he was trying to convey. But now, when Finn had asked him so directly, Truman immediately realized that his employer was not a simple man!

"Of course, but may I first ask, Mr. Lewis, why do you want to buy a car manufacturing plant?" Before sharing his own opinions, Truman decided to first understand Finn's goals. Knowing the employer's objectives would allow him to serve his employer better. This was his standard work principle and one of the reasons for his stellar reputation and success as a lawyer in Achievement Country.

"Mr. Truman, you're mistaken. I'm not looking to buy a car manufacturing plant but a private car production workshop that handcrafts cars," Finn clarified with a smile.

"Ah? Do you mean to say that you want to enter the industry of luxury car manufacturing?" Truman immediately understood the difference. He had initially thought of assembly line production, where cars are produced in bulk for market sale. But now, what Finn had in mind was a car manufacturing workshop that specialized in handcrafted cars. This was entirely different! Such workshops produced only luxury cars and sports cars, most of which were in the million-dollar range.

Cars like Ferrari, Bugatti, and Siamese Phantom, which had limited global sales, fell into this category.

Unfortunately, as confident as Truman was that he had guessed correctly this time, he was bound to face disappointment. The man sitting across from him was anything but predictable.

Finn chuckled lightly, "Mr. Truman, your guess is very close but still somewhat off. I agree with manufacturing luxury cars, but I disagree with the commercial aspect of it. I'm not purchasing this handcrafted car manufacturing workshop for sales. The cars produced by this workshop will be exclusively proposed for my family and me. The brand of cars produced will not be for sale; they'll be for my personal use." Finn's voice was steady and calm as he spoke.

Upon hearing this, Truman could feel an energetic jolt rush from his tailbone to his head, tingling his scalp. Was this what it meant to be aristocratic?! Until now, Truman might have met many nobles, but today, he had truly grasped what it meant to be a noble. His face turned bright red with excitement. Who in the world would buy a luxury car handcrafting workshop solely for personal use and not for sales?! Truman wasn't sure if other wealthy people did this, but as far as he knew, in the entire world, only one person did.

“Now, Mr. Truman, do you understand what I am trying to say?” Finn asked again with a smile.

“Yes... Yes, I understand.” Even though Truman had been respectful to Finn earlier, he hadn’t been nervous. But now, after hearing Finn’s words, he felt an unusual surge of nerves. He, who had met countless leaders and wealthy people, was stuttering — an unusual occurrence!

“Well then, Mr. Truman, have you come up with any good recommendations?” Finn chuckled as he posed the question.

Good recommendations? The ones Truman had in mind before were irrelevant now. He had been off base right from the start! He had initially considered the cost-effectiveness for Finn but now, he realised how foolish that was. Someone who could casually buy a car manufacturing company purely for personal vehicle production didn’t need to worry about cost-effectiveness! How could he think that owners of such bespoke vehicle production workshops that seemed relatively cheap would lack funds?! Their annual expenses could add up to rather large amounts! On the surface, it might seem like handcrafted production, but the machinery inside was far more advanced than that of an assembly line production factory, with higher precision. The “handcrafted” aspect referred to every component of the car being crafted by professional engineers personally operating those machines. Any component that failed to meet the standards was immediately discarded and remade..
