

72 Jackal Mountain Sect [2]

The irregularity of the trees slowly became organized as they passed through the path made by the sect. It was as if they were just doing some normal hiking, but for a different purpose. 1

Ellisa smiled as she saw a number of tall pavilions behind the walls. With just this, Ellisa knew that they were near and, for sure, this is what a sect looks like.

But there was still a sentiment that lingered in her mind. The structural design of the buildings was some kind of overdoing from her perspective. However, as she was not that really into talking about buildings and just overlooking stuff like this, she just shook it off.

They finally arrived at an open wall, destroyed by some unknown cause. From their position, they could see the whole area of the sect.

"Is this what a sect looks like?" she asked Jake, who was just walking silently, like a behaving cat, with his hands down and stiff.

Ellisa raised her eyebrows as Jake answered her question. She pondered it at that point but didn't further ask about it.

amount of energy in her fingers and pointed them to the ground. In the next second, the floor collapsed, forcing her to violently dig the ground.

Everyone in the room below ground was alarmed. Even though earlier they were feeling a bit nervous about the ruckus they heard, they didn't get out of the facility.

For that reason, they were still not done with what they were doing.

And as the floor collapsed, making a path for Ellisa, every expert in the room went on their knees. They already knew they were in danger. Their lives were at stake since the room they were in was reinforced with a strong array built by a famous array master.

Breaking into the room would already be proof that the mastermind behind the ruckus was higher than the General Spirit Realm since it was built for that purpose.

Making an array took time. And since they didn't have it because of the experimentation, they wanted the strongest array that could be built in a short amount of time, and it was the Protective Array that could withstand an attack from a

General Sprit Realm cultivator.

"Holy heavens!" They all gasped.

And just as Ellisa set her foot inside the room, her eyes darted red, glaring at every person inside.

There was approximately 14 personnel. And since Ellisa didn't know about the cultivation realms, she just assessed them in her own words.

'At the 3rd stage of core...'

Ellisa breathed out, then made another pressure exude from her body and reached the spines of the personnel.

"Let me ask you one thing. Where's that energy coming from?" She asked with a cunning smile on her lips.

The personnel quivered and slowly pointed to a capsule-like object that could fit a human inside. It was glass, but the inside was covered with a light blue mist, making it hard to see what was inside.

"Open it."

innocent or not. But she just passed through the children who seemed not to be at the right age to die.

Well, even though she was like that, she was some kind of person with virtue, which she learned from Lucas.

She flew straight to the source of the energy. And as she passed through cultivators, children were just surprised when they noticed that their seniors had died.

Ellisa was also absorbing their essence while she was on it. Not just that, but also the spiritual energy from them. It made her smile. It was because, looking at the current energy she had, it felt like she was halfway to her normal powers.

Well, before she 'died' and arrived here in this world, she was weakened for a reason she caused a problem for her master. It was even still lingering in her mind, the reason behind it.

At that time, Lucas was really into the Legendary Sword and was just thinking of dying. But her children, the dragons, and other familiars didn't want it. And even if he didn't care about their sentiments, he just weakened them. It was one of the things that made Ellisa ponder. Why would Lucas still want to die if he had them?

"In that way, you can follow me after you have lived your lives to the fullest. I don't have anything to pursue in this life. It's time to rest." That was what he said.

It was a heartbreaking moment for all of his familiars. And so, after he died, some of them followed and some obeyed his words.

And now that she thought about it, the person she was feeling right now must be similar to her. A foolish familiar who only wanted to be with their master.

In the time span of a minute, Ellisa arrived near the source of the familiar energy. And as she stood inside the tallest pavilion of the sect, every cultivator was alarmed.

Not just because she was a trespasser, but also someone with higher cultivation.

Unaware of it, Ellisa had already had her cultivation reach the middle of King Stage. Even those who were lower than her took their courage to stand before her.

"What is the purpose of your presence, esteemed senior?" One of them asked, trying to be polite to the maximum.

Ellisa, after hearing it, just smiled. It was actually a grin, but it was also a smile on her part since she was amused by how things turned out.

"Earlier, I was only called a mortal. And now, I am a senior?" she mumbled, pondering what had just really happened.

The reason she was amused by it was that she didn't know the reason behind it. Even if she persisted in her search for an answer, she was still unsure how to organize them.

However, it wasn't the business here. She was here because of a brother from other kin. And as she was just near the source, she was sure that it was someone like her.

Ellisa moved her hands, and the cultivators pondered. They didn't raise their weapons, but they were prepared to immediately draw them. But just as how things were away from their grasp, they didn't even manage to react when Ellisa moved her hands.

"Fucking fiends." Was what Ellisa said before a profound azure light covered the whole first floor of the pavilion.

In that instance, everyone couldn't bear the pressure that emanated from Ellisa. Their eyes all gawked in fear and surprise. Even if they try to reinforce themselves with spiritual energy, it all became useless at that point.

And after such pressure took their lives, another chunk of spiritual energy reached Ellisa and her dantian-like pool.

Her core finally merged with the spiritual energy and became one. Her core at this time was not similar to a core, but now a transparent gas-like form in a sphere.

She breathed out, then activated another magic circle, enabling her eyes to see what was just below the ground.

It will be suspecting to find experimentation on the higher floors since it is risky if the lower floor collapses. Even though there were some places that took experiments on the higher floors, her instinct was certain that it was below the ground.

And just as her guts told her, the source was from below the ground.

She sighed once more, then made a stance as if digging the ground. She gathered a tremendous amount of energy in her fingers and pointed them to the ground. In the next second, the floor collapsed, forcing her to violently dig the ground.

Everyone in the room below ground was alarmed. Even though earlier they were feeling a bit nervous about the ruckus they heard, they didn't get out of the facility.

For that reason, they were still not done with what they were doing.

And as the floor collapsed, making a path for Ellisa, every expert in the room went on their knees. They already knew they were in danger. Their lives were at stake since the room they were in was reinforced with a strong array built by a famous array master.

Breaking into the room would already be proof that the mastermind behind the ruckus was higher than the General Spirit Realm since it was built for that purpose.

Making an array took time. And since they didn't have it because of the experimentation, they wanted the strongest array that could be built in a short amount of time, and it was the Protective Array that could withstand an attack from a

General Sprit Realm cultivator.

"Holy heavens!" They all gasped.

And just as Ellisa set her foot inside the room, her eyes darted red, glaring at every person inside.

There was approximately 14 personnel. And since Ellisa didn't know about the cultivation realms, she just assessed them in her own words.

'At the 3rd stage of core...'

Ellisa breathed out, then made another pressure exude from her body and reached the spines of the personnel.

"Let me ask you one thing. Where's that energy coming from?" She asked with a cunning smile on her lips.

The personnel quivered and slowly pointed to a capsule-like object that could fit a human inside. It was glass, but the inside was covered with a light blue mist, making it hard to see what was inside.

"Open it."

