

Chapter 13a

"Okay, submit them on my table, I will take care of this," I said rubbing my jaw thinking to solve the puzzle.

"But Miss. Kader..."

"It's okay Mr. Kane, we did our best. So don't be sorry." I gave him a polite nod to dismiss.

He gave me a small smile and set the file on my table before walking out of my office. I mentally groaned and picked the file from the table.

After checking the entire file, I walked into his office and set the file on his table.

"Already?" He raised his brow surprisingly as not believing his own eyes.

"We have finished half of the work and will complete the remaining papers by tomorrow." I boldly said to him.

"Miss Kader, I am not paying you for free and didn't ask any of your opinion or complaints. If I give some work that means you must have to finish them in time," he said harshly.

"Don't you think you are way too harsh towards my employees? I don't think you can able to finish the two sets of papers by today?" I said meeting his same harsh tone by folding my hands against my chest.

"What if I fire all your team members just pointing the reason for lack of knowledge?" He asked ignoring my statement completely.

My mouth hung opened when I heard him say firing about my employees. "You are doing this purposely, I know that" I quarrelled in anger.

"Then try to save your employees." He smirked and handed me a file. "I want this file tomorrow morning in my table." He sternly said and took his seat.

Hugh! How badly I wanted to glue him to the chair. Can anyone please give me a superglue?

Giving him one last glare I stormed out of his office. When I reached my office, all my employees were standing in front of the door wearing a pure shock expression on their faces while a few of them are shivering visibly.

I furrowed my brows and approached them. "Why are you still here, you can leave." I maintained my natural composure although I wanted to throw my frustration out.

"What if we get fired?" One of my employees asked.

"Hugh! How did you know?" I asked in disbelief.

"Our boss emailed us. If we don't complete the work by tomorrow morning, he will replace our place with other employees." His eyes were almost glossy while he speaking

"I have a family to run, so this job is so important," He added.

I let out a long breath. "I know how everyone is depending on your job." I tried to comfort them but what can I do in this hardship.

I thought for a bit and an idea came into my mind. "Are you willing to work for the whole night?" I asked expecting their answer as my favour.

"Yes." they all said in unison. "Okay then, come to my apartment. We will work together and will have a nice dinner." I winked at them.

Their face lit up with happiness as hope filled their mind. That's my people. So supportive and dedicated. It's been one month since I am working in this office and they are very corroborating even though I am younger than them.

They seek my opinion even before they make a decision. They have supported me through my up and downs and it's my time to return my favour.

"Alright, guys! Let go." With that, we all headed to my apartment.

My apartment is not fit for fifteen members; somehow, they managed and did their work peacefully. No complaints, no lamentations.

When we got bored, we cracked some silly jokes to get rid of the sleep and again went back to our work.

Sweety was so understanding, she didn't disturb us. She played with other kids in the apartment and came at night to sleep.

Miss. Jaden helped me to cook and we enjoyed our team dinner in my apartment.

I fed Sweety and she departed to sleep by herself. Everyone admired Sweety and her behaviour.

Somehow we finished our work at 6.30 in the morning. "Okay, guys! Let's meet in the office."

They bid their goodbyes and went back to their home. I glanced at the wall clock and a small sigh escaped from my mouth. I have only an hour to sleep. I fell asleep on the couch once my head hit the pillow.

When I reached my office I met all my team members and thanked them personally. They all have a bright smile on their face like they achieved something.

"Okay, guys! Let see, what will happen." Some gave me a thump up and smiled genuinely.

I entered his office and set the file on his table. "Mr. Miller as you asked we have completed our work. Here are the files." I pointed out the file which I placed on his table.

He took the file and flipped the first page then closed it. "I assure you that you will never find any mistakes," I said proudly.

"Miss. Kader, Take this." He gave me a green colour file. "This is your new project. You and your team members are going to work on this." What nonsense he is talking?

"And forget about this." He returned the file to me the one I placed on his table earlier. "Because I already gave this to another team."

"What?!" I shouted.

I stood from my place. "This is too much. We worked hard to finish this project and now you can't tell us what to do." I roared angrily.

"You may be the project manager here, but I am the boss. You have to learn your place and obey me. Got it." He said annoyingly.

He treats me like trash as I'm some sort of waste paper, not in use. He pokes his nose into my job and plays a project manager role and finally orders me to follow his shitty things.

Urggh! I have started to hate my job, I mentally groaned but I'm not going to accept my defeat that easily.

I masked my face as natural and smiled brightly showing my perfect teeth not wanting to show him how broken I am inside.

"Of course! We will do it. After all, that was a useless project," I said keeping my tears on bay standing there with a broken heart.

"Miss. Kader, if you don't mind can you please throw them on the dustbin, there is no use to keep the file." He said pointing to the old file which has all our hard work and a sleepless night.

"Do by yourself," I said and walked out of his office stabbing him ten times on my mind.
