Chapter 7

Dan guessed a little and continued to say calmly, "Go to the room and open the drawer of the cabinet. There is a box inside. Take it out."

Jane replied with an "oh" and did as told. She indeed found a carved wooden box in the deepest part of the drawer. The patterns on the box were exquisite, and it had a faint fragrance.

Dan took it and opened it. There were several pieces of golder jewelry inside. There was a necklace, earrings, and a ring. The bracelet was made of gold and jade. The style was very special. The mutton-fat jade embedded in the gold was warm and transparent. It was full of color and looked very magnificent,

Jane's eyes widened as she looked at him in confusion.

"This..."

"When we got married, I didn't give you any decent betrothal gifts." Dan casually held them in his hands and looked at them one by one. "These are my compensation for you. Take a look. Is there anything that you don't like?"

Jane clenched her fists and relaxed them under the table. She was a little nervous. She secretly glanced at Dan's cold face and somehow felt a little sweetness in his heart.

None of the jewelry had any flaws.

But how did he get these things?

Dan saw through her thoughts and couldn't help but chuckle. "Don't worry, these aren't stolen. Their origins are legitimate!"

Jane's face suddenly turned red.

How could she doubt her husband like that?

"Keep them all." Dan closed the box and pushed it in front of her. He looked at her quietly with a pair of deep eyes. "This is all I can take out, as well as all the property of this family. We are married, so you should be in charge of it. So I'll give you all my property!"

"Dan, L..."

"There's one more thing." He interrupted her. "If you go back to your parent's home today, I won't accompany you. Apologize to your family for me."

Jane was stunned. Suddenly, she heaved a long sigh of relief and relaxed.

"Okay." She smiled and said, "Go ahead with your work. I can do it myself!"

Looking at her relieved expression, Dan shook his head and laughed in his heart. This little wife was really interesting. Her emotions were all hanging on her face, and she could not hide any of her worries.

It would be strange if she was not bullied by others!

Bullying?

Dan's hand, which was holding his fork, paused, and his heart suddenly tightened. What if she was really bullied by that family when she returned to her parent's home today?

But if she was in fact bullied, what did it have to do with him?

Dan's mind was a mess. After eating a few mouthfuls, he put down his bowl and fork, put on his coat, and went out.

Jane didn't know where he went. After tidying up the house, she went to take the bus. On the way, she received a call from Kate and listened to her nagging all the way. She didn't hang up until she got off the bus.

"You're too careless! What day is it today? Your husband didn't go with you? Does he care about you. or this marriage?"

On the other end of the line, Jane just smiled foolishly.

Kate May was a senior who was two grades higher than her and her best friend when she was at student. She had a fiery personality, and Jane often said that she was born in ancient times, so she must be a heroine.

At this moment, the heroine couldn't stand it anymore. She cursed him non-stop like a machine gun, "He has nothing! It's a blessing for him to marry you! But he doesn't cherish it and doesn't even accompany you to go home. He..."

"All right! Jane smiled awkwardly. "I didn't want him to accompany me. Today... today I'm going back home to ask for money. If he was with me, everything would be exposed!"

After a moment of silence, Kate sighed heavily.

"Jane, you are betting your happiness on it!"
