I turned to look at him with a look of disbelief, but General Killock just gave me a nod as if he was confirming this.

I looked at him once more with a more serious look and he gave the same nod as before.

With a sigh, I turned back to look at General Gardner who was shouting at his men to save him.

Slowly, they were bringing their bows up as if they were about to attack.

Seeing this, General Killock shouted, "Don't attack, we're friendly!"

When they heard this, the soldiers showed hesitation since they recognized that voice.

General Gardner also stopped yelling for his men to save him as he looked up at us.

It took him a while before he was able to calm down, but the way that he looked up made it clear that he still didn't trust us.

However, at the very least, they didn't start firing their arrows at us and allowed us to land in front of the fort.

I could feel the trepidation that was coming from Joan under me when she saw the way that the soldiers were pointing the arrows at her, but I patted her on the back and said, "It's fine. I'll go and talk to them."

She looked up at me and slowly gave a nod before calming down.

But I could tell that she was still prepared to escape at any moment.

Once we landed, General Killock jumped off Joan's back and moved over to the fort to say, "It's fine, we've already destroyed the enemy army. There are no more enemies left to attack us."

All of them looked at General Killock in shock as if they couldn't believe what he was saying.

After a long silence, General Gardner looked up at Joan and said, "Then this is...?"

His voice trailed off at the end, but it was clear what he was implying.

General Killock looked back at me and then said to General Gardner, "These are the special reinforcements sent by the fourth prince."

"Special reinforcements..." General Gardner repeated, but it was clear by the look on his face that he didn't seem to believe this.

But General Killock reached into his armour to pull out a piece of paper that he went over to present to General Gardner.

General Gardner took it with a doubtful look, but he recognized the mark that was on it.

This was the seal of the fourth prince and there was no one who was crazy enough to fake this seal.

That meant that this was indeed a real letter from the fourth prince.

As soon as he confirmed this, General Gardner no longer hesitated as he read the content of the message.

He had the same reaction as General Killock at first as he didn't understand what the message meant. But then when he looked up at the wyvern that was in front of him, he understood.

It seemed that the wyverns that had appeared on the battlefield were indeed reinforcements.

After looking at the wyvern in front of him for a bit, his expression slowly started to change.

Seeing the look on his face change like this, I couldn't help feeling a bit strange about the way that he looked at us. However, on the surface, I had a calm look on my face as if I wasn't worried at all.

After a long silence, General Gardner said to me, "Then you're saying that these wyverns listen to everything that you tell them?"

I shook my head while saying, "They won't listen to everything that I tell them, but they will listen to my orders when it comes to fighting."

There was a trace of disappointment that appeared on General Gardner's face when he heard this.

I knew immediately what this person was thinking as soon as I saw this expression on his face and there was a strong dislike for this person that filled me. If I could, I would have punched him in the face at that moment, but I held myself back in the end.

After all, I knew that I still needed him.

As for what he was thinking...

A noble like him was without a doubt thinking about how he could have shown off if he were to have a wyvern as a pet.

If he really tried anything, I wouldn't let him do it, but it was a good thing that he didn't try anything in the end.

After looking disappointed for a bit, General Gardner said, "Well, since these wyverns are under you and you came here as our reinforcements, then I'm still the one in charge of this place. As such, the credit of taking down the enemy goes to me, isn't that right."

General Killock looked like he wanted to say something, but I quickly stopped him by coughing.

Then looking down at General Gardner who was looking up at me with greedy eyes, I revealed a faint smile as I said with a nod, "That's right. Since you are the commander here and we are just your reinforcements, it was all perpetrated by you and you deserve all the credit."

General Gardner revealed a wide greedy smile when he heard this before saying, "Good, I'm glad that you understand. You can leave with your wyverns now, we'll take care of the rest."

General Killock looked like he really wanted to say something again, but I shook my head at him.

General Gardner had naturally seen this as well and he even looked at General Killock as if he was daring him to do something. From the very beginning, he already disliked General Killock who kept trying to boss him around, but he hadn't been able to do anything since General Killock belonged to the fourth prince.

Now...he wanted him to say something so he could take care of him at the same time.

But General Killock held himself back in the end.

General Gardner looked a bit disappointed, but he didn't say anything else to him.

Instead, he looked at me and waved his hand as if he was dismissing me while saying, "You can go now."

I just gave a simple nod and patted Joan on the back before leaving.

As I left, there was a faint smile that appeared on my lips.

652 Future of the wyverns (1)

After returning to where the other wyverns were waiting, I saw Cecilia looking at me with a look like she was questioning me about what happened.

I shook my head with a faint smile before waving my hand at them as if I was saying, "Let's go back."

Cecilia gave a nod in response, but there was also a worried look that appeared in her eyes.

That was because she knew what I was referring to when I said 'back'.

I was naturally referring to my own territory.

She didn't know how Rose would feel about me bringing all of these dangerous wyverns to their home.

But before we could leave, there was someone that rushed over to catch up to us.

"Wait!"

When I looked down, I saw that it was General Killock who had rushed to catch up to me.

Seeing him, I stopped Joan from taking off and waited for him to come over to say what he wanted to say. It was clear by the look on his face that there was something that he wanted to ask me.

When he stopped in front of me, the first thing that he asked was, "Why?"

He didn't explain anything as he just directly asked me this, but I knew what he was referring to.

"You're asking why I let him take all of the credit?" I asked back with a smile on my face.

General Killock just gave a simple nod before looking right at me with a look that made it seemed like he was displeased with what had happened.

I just gave a casual shrug before saying, "There's no need for me to take the credit for this matter, it's better to give it to him. You'll see what I mean when the war is over."

General Killock was surprised to hear this.

However, even if he was still confused, he didn't say anything else about this.

Instead, he turned to look at all the wyverns that were behind me and asked, "What are you going to do with them?"

I turned back to look at the wyverns as well before turning back to say, "Well, that's up to his highness. I have a plan, but I won't be able to put it into action without the help of his highness."

General Killock revealed another confused look, but he didn't ask anything. freeweb novel.co m

Instead, it was me who said, "In the future, you might be able to get one yourself."

There was a shocked look that appeared on General Killock's face as he wanted to ask something else, but I had already waved my hand and we were setting off.

...

To my surprise, Rose didn't seem as shocked as I thought she would be when she saw all of the wyverns flying to our town.

Instead, it was the guards that were left behind that were more shocked.

During the time that Cecilia had left with me, Moon had been taking over her duties guarding the town.

Moon had been in charge of the guards when they were back in the village, so it wasn't hard for her to fit into this role. Not to mention, she had been in the town for some time, so it was easy for her to get along with the guards.

But the most important thing was...she was a beautiful elf.

The men of the guards were naturally happy to follow a beautiful commander, which was why they had followed Cecilia in the first place.

Of course, not a single one of them dared to cross the line since they already knew that Moon was my fiancée.

When we arrived back in the town, the guards were all on the walls and Moon was even using her magic as a deterrence.

It seemed like they had been prepared to fight to death to protect the town from the wyverns.

So at the very least, it seemed that my guards were quite loyal that they wouldn't flinch in front of all these wyverns.

But before the fight could begin, they were able to spot me on the back of Joan. Then they saw that there were other people sitting on the backs of the wyverns, so they didn't open fire in the end.

When we landed, Rose was standing there with a bitter smile on her face.

As I came down, she just shook her head and asked with a sigh, "What are you planning to do with these things?"

Seeing how exasperated my wife was, I immediately went forward to massage her shoulders as I said, "I have some ideas of what to do with them, you don't need to worry about them at all." But after a pause, I did say awkwardly, "Though, there is the problem of feeding them..."

Rose gave another sigh before saying, "Leave that to Haley, she'll think of something."

I gave a nod in response, but I couldn't help looking awkwardly at Haley who was standing not far away.

She had heard everything, but she still gave me a smile to show that she could do it.

Rose pulled my attention back with a cough before saying, "So? You still haven't told me what you're planning to do with them."

With a faint smile, I said, "Well, I'll leave a hundred to the town and they can learn to ride them into battle."

Rose had a skeptical look when she heard this, but then when she looked over at Cecilia and the others still on the backs of the wyverns, that look of doubt disappeared a bit.

Still, she asked, "What about the rest? Are you just going to leave them here to eat us out of house and home?"

I shook my head quickly as I said, "No, no, that will depend on when the fourth prince gets here."

She raised a brow, but she didn't say anything.

But just like I said, the fourth prince arrived in our town two days later.

653 Future of the wyverns (2)

When the fourth prince arrived, the first thing that he said was, "How?"

He didn't even explain anything, he just asked for an explanation without even indicating what he was asking about.

However, I knew exactly what he was asking about.

In fact, there was only one thing that he could be asking about in this situation.

It was those over a thousand wyverns that were gathered outside of our town.

We had designated a large clearing in the forest near the town for the wyverns and had set up facilities for them.

During these past two days, Haley had been running all over trying to find food for these wyverns. Even the elves had been called on for help since there was plenty of food to gather from their forest.

The wyverns were like bottomless pits when it came to food.

It was just a good thing that Haley was a true goddess of wealth that we were able to have enough money to feed them.

I just looked at the fourth prince with a smile and said, "You asked me to deal with them, so I dealt with them. Is there anything wrong with that?"

The fourth prince looked at me as if he was questioning if I was serious or not.

But after a while, he said with a bitter smile, "You know that this isn't what I meant."

I just looked at him with the same smile on my face without saying a single thing.

The fourth prince gave a sigh before saying, "What are you planning on doing with them now?"

This was what I had been waiting for, but I didn't rush to tell him.

Instead, I said to the fourth prince, "How about we take a walk first and have a look at the wyverns?"

The fourth prince was surprised to hear this, but he gave a nod of agreement in the end.

The two of us left the town with quite a large group in the end.

It was all of the subordinates of the fourth prince who had come back to the town with us. They had been waiting here the entire time for the arrival of the fourth prince and now that he was here, they accompanied him as if they were there to protect him.

But at the same time, there was something that they had to report to the fourth prince once they were there.

When we arrived at the clearing where the wyverns were, there was a loud sound that came from in front of us.

It was the sounds of wyverns roaring and the sounds of something hard hitting each other.

I wasn't surprised to hear this, but the fourth prince looked at me with one brow raised.

I just gestured for him to go forward and see for himself what these sounds were.

When we walked through the trees and into the clearing, we saw what was making all that noise.

It was two wyverns fighting with each other.

But the strange thing about these wyverns was that there were two people sitting on their backs that seemed to be directing them. As they gave orders, the wyverns followed them to clash with each other.

It seemed like this was a fight between two wyvern riders.

After watching this for a bit, the fourth prince looked at me with a look like he was asking me to explain what was happening.

With a smile, I just said, "It is as you can see. They are controlling the wyverns and fighting with them as riders. This is their training for the future when they ride onto the battlefield as wyvern riders."

The fourth prince had a shocked look on his face at first, but slowly it changed into a look of thought.

I had no doubt that the fourth prince understood what I was implying with this, it was just waiting to see how he would react.

After a long silence, the fourth prince asked, "How many have you trained so far?"

"One hundred." I replied in a calm voice.

The fourth prince narrowed his brows slightly as he said, "But the report says that you have over a thousand wyverns?"

I gave a nod without saying a single thing.

The fourth prince looked at me with the same knitted brows for a bit before a smile slowly crept onto his face to show that he understood what I meant. With that smile on his face, he asked, "How many are you planning on giving me?"

"Five hundred."

The fourth prince slightly knitted his brows again when he heard this before saying, "Only five hundred? I can take more than that."

With a bitter smile, I said, "You should see just how much they eat before you say that."

The fourth prince just said with a chuckle, "Is it really that much that I can't afford to feed them?"

With a more serious look, I said, "Well, there are other places that I want to send these wyverns, so I hope that you will not mind."

The fourth prince narrowed his eyes to look at me as if he was doubting my allegiance again, but I just calmly looked right into his eyes.

It was only after he stared into my eyes for a bit that he finally gave a nod and said, "Alright, we'll follow your plans."

He seemed satisfied with what he saw and that was all that was necessary.

I gave a nod in response before looking at the guards that were behind the fourth prince.

Though I couldn't see their faces, I could see how awkward they were standing. It was as if they wanted to say something, but they didn't know how to say it.

So I said with a cough, "I think that your men have something to say."

The fourth prince turned around to look at them before asking, "What is it?"

The cloaked figures were surprised to hear this, but the leader of that group still stepped forward and said, "We have already chosen wyverns as well."

The fourth prince just looked at them for a bit before saying, "Alright."

It was as if he didn't care about their confession at all.

The cloaked figures couldn't help revealing surprised stances when they heard this.

The ones behind the leader all looked at each other as if they were confused about this before the leader said, "If you have any punishment for us, we will accept it willingly."

The others all nodded before bowing their heads, as if they were waiting for their punishment.

That was because they knew what the fourth prince was really like.

If someone did something behind the fourth prince's back, he would definitely take action. Especially if it was someone who was close to the fourth prince.

They wanted to ask for punishment now so that he would be more lenient about them not reporting this matter to him.

The fourth prince just looked at them with a calm look on his face before shaking his head and saying, "It's not your fault, so why would I punish you?" He turned back to look at me to say, "I'm sure that you were just caught up in whatever he was doing and you had no choice but to go along with it."

As the fourth prince looked at me, I just revealed a faint smile.

But it was a completely different reaction from the cloaked figures that were standing behind the fourth prince.

Though their expressions couldn't be seen, it was very clear by the way that they were standing just how they felt about this matter. The surprised stance that they had couldn't be mistaken for anything else.

It was clear that they didn't understand what was happening.

It was almost as if they were looking at the fourth prince like they were looking at a completely different person.

But the fourth prince just ignored them as he kept looking at me.

After waiting for some time, the wyverns that had been fighting stopped fighting with each other as a winner had been declared.

When they happened, the fourth prince said, "Can I go and take a look at them?"

I gave a nod in response and led the fourth prince into the clearing where the wyverns were.

The cloaked figures that had been behind him had been in a daze the entire time, but seeing the fourth prince moving, they snapped out of that daze. Though it was clear by how they were moving a bit slow that they were still surprised by the actions of the fourth prince, they still followed him without hesitation.

That just went to show just how well trained they were and how loyal they were.

When we came over, the ones that had been training immediately came over to salute us.

Even the wyverns acted a bit more respectful seeing me.

That was because there was a single wyvern that was glaring at them to make them respectful.

After that wyvern suppressed these other wyverns, she came over to my side in a happy manner like she was happy to see me.

The fourth prince wasn't surprised at all to see Joan come over to my side and he just stood there with an intrigued look on his face as he looked at her while she rubbed her face against mine.

After a while, he said, "Can I ride her?"

I was surprised to hear this from the fourth prince since I never thought that someone like him would ask something like this.

But seeing the look on his face, it was hard to say no.

So with a nod, I got on Joan's back and then reached my hand down for him to come up as well.

The cloaked figures behind the fourth prince looked like they were panicking, but they didn't stop him. Instead, they went to their own wyverns that had been staying in this clearing and quickly mounted them.

It was as if they were prepared to take off at any moment.

It seemed that they were already used to the fourth prince's willfulness and knew that instead of trying to stop him, it was better for them to try and figure out a way to keep him safe.

The fourth prince took my hand during all of this and got on Joan's back with me.

Once he was on, I had Joan take off.

As we flew into the sky, I could feel the fourth prince's hand gripping me from behind.

It seemed that no matter how bold the fourth prince was, he still wasn't able to remain calm when being shot up into the sky like this. Though to be fair, this was an experience that most people couldn't stay calm in.

The feeling of wind rushing past you really was one that was just too thrilling and shocking that one couldn't help feeling fearful.

But once we were in the sky, the fourth prince suddenly let go of me and looked around us.

"Ha, ha, ha, so this is the feeling of flying." The fourth prince said in an excited voice before doing something that even shocked me.

He had let go of me, but he didn't stop there.

The fourth prince suddenly got up on Joan's back and started walking around.

Even someone like me who had gotten used to riding on Joan's back couldn't do something like this. However, the fourth prince had done it without any hesitation.

The good thing was that he didn't fall right away even though there was a strong wind blowing past us.

However, I couldn't help looking at him with a worried look as he just walked on her back and turned his head around like a child in a candy store.

Finally, I couldn't take it anymore and said, "Brother, please sit down. Doing something like this is dangerous."

"Ha, ha, ha, what's dangerous about..."

Before he could finish, there was a powerful gust of wind that suddenly swept the fourth prince off his feet.

Not only that...it swept him off Joan's back.

Read Shota's Isekai NTR Adventure - Chapter 655 Future of the wyverns (4)

For a second it almost seemed like the fourth prince was about to fall off.

At this height, he definitely would have turned into a pile of meat on the ground if he fell.

When they saw the fourth prince get swept off Joan's back, his subordinates who had also come up with their wyverns started moving into position to catch him.

With the way that they moved, it was as if they had already expected this to happen and was just waiting for it to happen. It seemed that they had been following the fourth prince for quite some time now that they were able to predict his moves.

It seemed that they had suffered under the fourth prince quite a bit.

But there was nothing for them to do since Joan suddenly twisted.

With one quick scoop, Joan grabbed the fourth prince falling from her back with her claw and put him right back before flying as normal.

I had made sure to hold on tight as soon as I felt her turning.

When I saw the fourth prince safely on Joan's back again, I couldn't help letting out a sigh of relief.

After all, I never would have imagined that the fourth prince would do something as risky as this.

However, the fourth prince didn't seem to mind at all.

Instead of being dazed or terrified like a normal person would be, he was laughing as he said, "That really was exhilarating, let's do it again."

I really felt the urge to slap him on the head when I heard this, but I held myself back in the end.

Striking the fourth prince...even if I was close enough to him that he called me brother, I didn't think that I would be able to get away with it unscathed.

I patted Joan on the back to show my gratitude for catching the fourth prince in time and she just gave a happy soft roar as if she was saying, "It's no problem."

I could also see the fourth prince's men looking at their wyverns as if they were asking them if they could do the same. However, the wyverns seemed to look away when they were asked this question.

It seemed like this wasn't possible for them to do the same thing as Joan.

But then again, it wasn't as if they had the same physical capabilities as Joan.

There was a reason why I had gotten all those treasures from the fourth prince, it was all to raise Joan to become the Wyvern King...Queen.

After patting Joan, I said, "Let's go down."

She gave a nod before she started to descend.

The look on the fourth prince's face made it clear that he wasn't happy about this, but I just ignored it as I had Joan maintain her course.

If we remained in the air, who knew what else the fourth prince would do.

For my sanity and the sanity of the fourth prince's men flying around, it was better if we landed as soon as possible.

Once we landed the fourth prince's people quickly came forward to surround him.

Though they didn't do anything, I could see something familiar from them.

It seemed that they were looking carefully at him, as if making sure that there was nothing wrong with him.

This was similar to how Rose and others would always check me after I came back from one of my trips...

It seems that they really did care about the fourth prince.

When they were finished, the fourth prince came forward to ask, "Can I have a wyvern as well?"

I was completely caught off guard by this sudden request from the fourth prince.

I just stared at him as if I was trying to figure out if he was being serious or not, but the excited look in the eyes of the fourth prince didn't change.

It seemed like he really meant what he said.

But that surprised me even more.

Why did the fourth prince suddenly ask for a wyvern like this?

No...it wasn't sudden.

The signs had all been there since the beginning, I should have already expected this based on the way that he had been looking at the wyverns the entire time.

From the very beginning, the fourth prince should have wanted a wyvern of his own.

In that case...

"Alright, you can get one as well." I said in a calm voice.

Though I was calm, the subordinates of the fourth prince were anything but that.

The way that they waved their arms at me from behind the fourth prince made it clear that they wanted to change my mind. The way that they almost seemed like they were dancing around, it was clear that they wanted me to reject the fourth prince.

But I had other plans.

The fourth prince was an important part of my plan now, so I had to make sure that he was safe.

What was safer than having a wyvern by his side to protect him?

These were giant powerful creatures that almost no one would be able to fight against.

If there was a wyvern that was protecting the fourth prince, would anyone be able to do anything to him?

Though there would be the danger of the fourth prince falling off, I was certain that it wouldn't be a real danger. The fourth prince was someone important, there was no doubt that he would have magic items that would save him if something like that were to happen.

So in the end, I called the wyvern shaman over to help the fourth prince pick a wyvern of his own.

The fourth prince was immediately intrigued by the wyvern shaman and had wanted to take the wyvern shaman, but the wyvern shaman just ignored him.

So the fourth prince had no choice but to choose another one.

The one that he chose...was a child.

Well, it wasn't exactly a child, but it was a teenager wyvern that hadn't fully grown yet.

Read Shota's Isekai NTR Adventure - Chapter 656 A familiar guest

But there was a reason why the fourth prince had chosen this young wyvern instead of choosing a fully grown wyvern.

He said that it was because it was easier to teach one that was younger, so he could shape it into how he wanted it to grow.

However, those that observed them closely would have noticed something.

The young wyvern...was just like the fourth prince, which was why they had bonded in the first place.

It wasn't that the young wyvern was just as smart as the fourth prince, but rather...it was just as good at hiding its true face like the fourth prince. When the wyvern met the fourth prince, the two of them looked at each other as if there was some kind of resonance between them.

Perhaps that was just how kindred spirits acted when they found each other.

The parents of this young wyvern didn't even try to stop it from going with the fourth prince, though it did look like they were sorry about sending their son to the fourth prince to take care of.

If only they knew about the fourth prince's true personality as well...

Like that, the fourth prince was able to choose his wyvern partner.

I didn't know if I should laugh or cry seeing the two of them together.

But the one thing that I did know was that I should feel sorry for his subordinates since it was almost as if the fourth prince had doubled. In the future, they would surely suffer because this wyvern chose to go with the fourth prince.

...

A week later, there was a group of guests that arrived in my town.

The one who led this group was someone that I was familiar with.

It was Viscount Henry who brought this group of nobles to my town.

These were the nobles of the surrounding area, the same ones that I had gotten to sign the economic zone development agreement. So it could be said that these were nobles that were on the same side as me.

But the ones that Viscount Henry chose were the nobles that he was close to.

There was a reason for that.

After greeting them, I got right into the main topic by bringing them to see the wyverns.

Other than Viscount Henry who already knew about the wyverns, the rest of them all revealed shocked looks.

But even if Viscount Henry already knew about the wyverns, it was hard for him not to be surprised.

These were wyverns after all, they were very shocking to begin with.

After taking some time to calm down, one of the nobles asked, "Count Zwein, why are you showing us all of these?"

The other nobles all looked at me with focused looks, as if they were waiting to hear what I had to say.

I just calmly said, "Because I want you to take some of these wyverns with you."

They all had shocked looks when they heard me say this. There were even looks of doubt as if they were trying to figure out if what I was saying was real.

I didn't say anything as I just waited for them to respond.

Finally, one of the nobles asked, "You want us to take these terrifying beasts with us?"

With a faint smile, I shook my head and said, "They're not terrifying beasts, they're quite tame if you know how to treat them."

After saying that, I pointed at one of the wyvern riders that was about to take off.

They all followed my finger to look at this wyvern rider fly off into the sky and do drills as they were flying.

None of the nobles could believe that a human could ride a wyvern like this, but there was no denying the facts that were in front of their eyes. Even if they wanted to deny it, they couldn't since it was right there.

Still, they couldn't help feeling worried about this.

Once the demonstration was over, I calmly said, "The reason why I want to give you these wyverns is because I want you to use them to protect our special economic zone. You will train them and take care of them to patrol the area of this special economic zone."

All of the nobles were once again surprised to hear this, but they quickly revealed serious looks.

When their own benefits were involved, they naturally became serious.

A wyvern was a powerful asset and having just one would mean that their forces would be much stronger.

And the fact that this was linked to the special economic zone meant that they could expect support from Count Zwein on how to train these wyverns. After all, this special economic zone was something that he proposed, so there was no doubt that he would provide help to make sure that it succeeds.

So even if they looked serious, there were excited glows that were in their eyes.

It didn't take me long to work out the details of this, the only thing left was for the nobles to figure out who they would send to take these wyverns.

There were fifteen nobles here, which meant that each of them would be taking three wyverns each since I was planning on only giving them fifty wyverns in the first place. The last five would go to Viscount Henry since he was my direct subordinate.

Three wyvern riders under them...it meant that no one would dare attack their territory in the future.

If it was my previous world, it would be like suddenly gaining three tanks.

No one was crazy enough to send soldiers to fight tanks head on.

With this, it would guarantee the safety of their territories in the future.

But at the same time, it meant that they were forced into the same boat as me since I was the one that gave them the wyverns.

They had seen the Wyvern Queen's ability to control the wyverns, so they knew that it would be impossible to rebel against me with these wyverns.

Now...it was all about who could get closer to me.

Visiting in-laws (1)

?Another week passed before we were able to settle the matter of the wyverns for these nobles.

Most of the time was actually spent just bringing the ones that would become wyvern riders here and preparing them for the training. The actual training would be carried out in my town and they would only be allowed to leave when they were proper wyvern riders.

But this was the part that I didn't need to participate in.

The only part that I needed to participate in was the part where they had to choose their wyverns.

I had to be there with Joan and the wyvern shaman to let them choose.

Once they finished choosing, I was free to do whatever I wanted.

That meant that I was free to leave the town.

There was a place that I had been meaning to go to, but I never had a chance to go with the situation of the war.

It was a place that I should go because of what had happened before the war.

Because of my engagement with Veronica, I was visiting Bright Water City to meet with the duke and the duchess. It was a visit to my in-laws now that I had gotten engaged with Veronica.

But of course, it wasn't just to visit my in-laws that I was heading to Bright Water City.

There was something that I also had to discuss with the duke, something that would be very important in the future.

Still, I couldn't help feeling nervous as we headed to Bright Water City.

Since coming to this world, this was my first time meeting in-laws. Even before coming to this world, I had never met any in-laws because I had never gotten married before. The only girlfriend that I had...well it didn't turn out well in the end...

So it wasn't as if I had experience with meeting in-laws.

I had never met Rose's parents since she had never taken me to see them and Cecilia's parents were in the same territory as Rose's parents, so I couldn't see them and not Rose's parents.

Oh, right, I did meet Haley's father when I saved them, but that really couldn't be considered meeting an in-law...

So this was my first time if I thought about it properly.

Veronica could see that I was panicking because of this, so she said, "It's fine, you've already met my parents. It isn't as if they will start treating you any different now that we're engaged."

I revealed a faint bitter smile when I heard this, but the look on my face made it clear that I was still worried.

After all, there was no telling what would happen...

Would her father go, "You must defeat me for my daughter's hand in marriage."? freew ebnove l.com

Would her mother test me on different things to see if I was good enough?

It really was nerve wracking thinking about all of this.

But it wasn't as bad as it was for the people of Bright Water City when they saw the wyverns approach.

It was a total of ten wyverns that we brought with us since I had brought some things as gifts for her parents. However, in the eyes of the people of Bright Water City, all they saw were attackers of Bright Water City.

They didn't see us as visitors, they saw us as wyverns that were about to destroy the city.

I could even see the guards that were lining the walls, looking like they were prepared to fight to the death.

When I saw all of this, I couldn't help asking Veronica, "Did you send the letter like I told you to?"

Veronica didn't answer as she slowly turned away, as if she was scared to look at me.

As soon as I saw her acting this way, I got my answer.

It was no wonder they were acting this way.

If they had no idea that we were coming, it wasn't strange that they would think that we were a group of invading wyverns that were here to attack the city. They would think that we were here to destroy their homes, so of course they would go all out against us.

I immediately had our group stop descending and turn around.

With the situation being like this, it wasn't as if we could just land without any issues, so we had to do something before entering the city.

So I had our group land in a clearing near Bright Water City.

After glaring at Veronica for a bit who just pretended like she didn't see anything, I had Shadow Five deliver something to me.

Only when Shadow Five came back with a response did I have everyone head back to the city.

This time, there wasn't the same reaction as before.

Though there were still guards that were on the walls, they didn't look like they were about to attack us. Instead, they just carefully watched as if they were still wary of us.

We were allowed to land outside of the city and identify ourselves.

But the main thing was that the duke and the duchess were on the walls with the guards.

The duke was the one that I had sent Shadow Five to contact to tell him about this situation.

I knew that only with the duke's help would we be able to bring the wyverns into the city to achieve our goal.

When we came up to the gate, Veronica waved as she saw her parents, but both of them had bitter smiles on their faces.

Though I could see that these bitter smiles weren't just directed at her, they were also directed at me.

It seemed that I had somehow been caught up in this because of Veronica and had been deemed an irresponsible person with her since I didn't send a letter ahead of time.

I could only regret my decision of leaving this to Veronica.

I had thought that she would be happy to talk to her parents, but it seemed that she didn't think about them at all.

In the end, it was my mistake...

Visiting in-laws (2)

Once we were right up in front of the gate, there was a commotion that came from within.

Though we couldn't see what was happening, we could hear the sounds that came out.

It was the sounds of people rushing to get out of the way.

Once they calmed down, the captain of the guard looked at us and waved for us to come over.

The wyverns were just too big to fit through the gates, so the only way to get into the city was to fly over them. But there was a crowd that was gathered behind the gate, so they had to be evacuated first before we did this.

Once the captain of the guards gave the signal, I had Joan take the lead in flying over the gates.

The flapping of the wyvern wings generated a large amount of wind that seemed to blow some of the guards down since they weren't prepared for the sudden gust of wind.

But the wyverns quickly flew over the wall and landed in the area behind the gate.

With a large 'thud' sound, they found themselves surrounded by people that had gathered to observe the wyverns. There were quite a few people that had gathered since wyverns were a rare thing in the first place.

The only time that one would normally see wyverns was if they were being attacked by them.

There were rarely any chances to see wyverns like this.

I just ignored them all as I climbed off Joan with Veronica.

When we came down, we saw a group walking over.

When Veronica saw them, she happily ran over with a smile on her face before jumping at one of the people that were there. The one that caught her shook her head with a bitter smile before saying, "You're in front of others, you should act like a proper lady."

Veronica just stuck her tongue out at her mother, but she didn't mind it as she kept hugging her.

It seemed that the two of them were very happy to see each other again.

The duke just shook his head with a smile as he watched them for a bit, but he turned to look at me eventually.

With the same smile on his face, he said, "It's good to see you again."

There was no extra courtesy in his voice, he just spoke to me as if I was a part of his family.

I had to admit that I was a bit surprised to hear him speak to me like this since I thought that there would be more resistance from Veronica's family. After all, I was just a count while she was the daughter of a duke.

The difference in status should have been clear.

But it didn't seem like they were discriminating against me at all.

Since they didn't discriminate against me, I had no reason to not greet them properly.

With a smile on my face, I said, "Your lordship, it's good to see you again."

The duke shook his head with the same smile before saying, "What are you saying, you should be calling me father in law."

Once again, I was surprised at how easily he accepted me, but it wasn't as if I disliked this.

So with a nod, I said, "Yes, father in law."

The duke gave a satisfied nod before turning to look at the wyverns.

As he looked at the wyverns, the smile that was on his face slowly turned bitter as he said, "You really gave us a surprise with these things."

I couldn't help revealing an awkward look when I heard this, but I didn't say anything to explain. After all, I wouldn't just throw my future wife under the bus because of this matter.

But to my surprise, the duke suddenly said, "It's because she forgot to send a letter that this happened, right?"

I looked at him with a surprised look, not knowing whether I should confirm this or not, but the duke just continued by saying, "I'm sorry about her. We tried to raise her well, but you should know how much of a free spirit she is, so there was nothing that we could do. I hope that you'll help us take care of her in the future."

This time, I was the one that revealed a bitter smile.

That was because this just confirmed that the look that I saw from them earlier wasn't what I thought it was.

I thought it was a look that meant that they blamed me for this, but now...

It seemed that the reason that they had looked at me like that was because they were sorry for Veronica.

It seemed that they had already guessed who was the one that had forgotten to inform them about this.

All I could think when I realized this was...

"As expected of her parents. They already knew everything about her."

But that wasn't strange since they had raised her since she was young, so they knew exactly what kind of personality Veronica had. They were the ones that knew her better than I did since I had spent far less time with her.

Still, it wasn't as if I could just remain silent.

With a sigh, I said, "Even if she's like this, she does have her good sides. She's always showing me different things that I never would have thought of before."

The duke revealed a faint smile before saying, "Please keep taking care of her in the future."

I said with a nod, "Of course, she will be my wife, so I will naturally take care of her."

The duke's smile became wider when he heard this, but instead of saying something, he just patted me on the shoulder to show his satisfaction.

After this, the wyverns were left there for the people to admire while the rest of us headed to the duke's manor.

As we left, Joan looked at me with a look asking for help, but there was nothing that I could do for her.

So all I could do was give her a look that said.

"Just stick it out for now."

After leaving the wyverns by the gate, we headed to the duke's manor together.

The trip itself was quite silent for me and the duke as we just watched Veronica talking with her mother.

From time to time, I would chime in since she called on me for some things, but it was mainly Veronica who spoke.

I was worried that the ducal couple would be angry because some of the stories that she told were considered quite dangerous for her, but it didn't seem like that. It seemed like they were already used to her acting up like this, so they just listened with smiles on their faces.

When we arrived at the manor, the four of us moved at a casual pace to the living room.

There was already tea and desserts set up for us.

So the four of us sat down on the couches that were in the center of the living room.

On one couch was the duke and duchess, on the other couch was me and Veronica.

Veronica didn't seem like she had any worries at all as she immediately started drinking the tea and having the snacks. There was certainly no problem with her appetite even though there was a somewhat tense atmosphere in the air.

She seemed like she wasn't bothered at all.

The duke and duchess on the other hand were much more calm and reserved as they had some tea and desserts, but they were also looking at me the whole time.

It was awkward for me to reach out for the tea and desserts like this, so I just awkwardly sat there.

This persisted for a bit before Veronica looked up at me and said, "What are you doing? Come and have some of this with me. There's no need to hold back, we're all family here."

To my surprise, the duke and duchess both nodded in agreement with Veronica.

With how they were acting, I had thought that they had brought me here to judge me.

Even if the duke had given encouraging words to me on the way here, I knew that it wouldn't be that simple since the duchess had never said a thing. But now, even the duchess seemed like she had accepted me.

I couldn't help feeling confused by how this situation developed, but I couldn't just make it more awkward.

So I just poured myself a cup of tea and took a sip to calm my nerves before waiting to see what the duke and duchess would do next.

After another long silence, the duke finally said, "I know that this is a bit late, but we really do have to thank you for accepting our daughter."

The duchess nodded in agreement after the duke said this.

But for me, there was a shocked look that appeared on my face.

After all, I had never expected the duke to open with something like this and for the duchess to agree with him.

Veronica pouted her lips when she heard this before saying, "How could you say that about your precious daughter? Shouldn't you be more sad that she's being taken away from you?"

The duke and duchess both revealed wide smiles when they heard this before the duke said, "I've always been worried about your marriage. You're too wild to just settle with anyone, so I've always been worried about what to do with you, especially since you're so old now. I'm just glad that this matter was taken care of before it became too late."

The duchess nodded in agreement as she said, "Right, I've always tried my best to teach you to be a lady, but..." She gave a sigh before continuing, "This girl, I really don't know who you got this personality of yours from."

The duke couldn't help revealing a bitter smile when he heard this, but he didn't say anything.

However, that bitter smile of his was more than enough to tell me what he was thinking.

It seemed that Veronica's personality was inherited from her mother...

But right now, the duchess seemed like a very calm person.

Was it because she was in front of me or was it because she had mellowed out with time?

If that was the case, did that mean that Veronica would eventually settle down?

No, if the duke had this kind of bitter smile on his face, it must mean that there was more to this story that I didn't know.

It seemed that I had quite the future ahead of me...

Still, I had chosen to be with her, so it wasn't as if I could back down now.

After listening to her parents complain about her for a bit, Veronica finally said, "Are you still my parents or not? Shouldn't you be describing the good things about me instead of complaining about me?"

I said with a faint smile, "They're only saying these things because they care about you. You should be happy that they care so much about you that they are complaining like this."

Veronica looked back at me with pouted lips like a child as she said, "But I don't want them telling you all the bad things about me."

I patted her on the head as I said, "I already said that I would accept all the good and bad things about you. You don't need to worry about a thing."

She looked at me with a touched look for a bit before suddenly coming forward to hug me.

I just hugged her too and patted her on the back.

The duke and duchess looked at each other with smiles on their faces before the duke said, "It seems that now that she has someone she loves, our daughter doesn't need us anymore."

The duchess said with a nod of agreement, "Right, once she has that special person in her life, she forgets about her parents."

Veronica quickly left my embrace with a blush on her face before turning to say, "Of course I still need you."

The two of them just looked at her with dotting smiles on their faces.

But then, the duke suddenly turned to me and bowed his head as he said, "I ask that you take care of her from now on."

To my surprise, I found that the duchess had also bowed her head to me.

After being in a daze for a second from being caught off guard by this, I quickly stood up and went over to help them up as I said, "Father in law, mother in law, there's no need for this."

Both of them looked up with smiles on their faces when they heard this before the duke said, "Hearing you call us this so readily really does make us happy. I hope that we can maintain this relationship in the future."

The duchess nodded in agreement to this.

"Mom, dad..." Veronica said in a touched voice.

I said with a nod, "Of course. I hope that we can have a good relationship in the future as well."

It seemed that I had been completely mistaken about the duke and duchess.

I had thought that they would look down on me since I was considered lower status than their daughter and would make it hard for me. I thought that I would have to pass some kind of test to get their approval to marry their daughter.

But it seemed that they had already planned on accepting me from the very beginning.

This was partly because of how difficult their daughter was to marry off in the beginning, but of course that wouldn't be the only thing. After all, the two of them clearly cared about their daughter very much.

Part of it was because of the happiness that their daughter showed which proved that she was happy with the person that she chose.

And the other part...was the look of approval that the duke had when he looked at me.

As a duke, I'm certain that he would have an extensive information network in this country. So he should be aware of the accomplishments that I had made during this time.

This was most likely where that look of approval came from.

It seemed that I had done enough to claim the approval of these in-laws of mine.

It seemed that this would wrap up quite nicely.

Or it would have if there wasn't something else that I had to discuss with them.

The duke was the one that actually brought it up as he suddenly said, "You have something else that you want to discuss with us, right?"

I was surprised to hear the duke say this, but I gave a nod since this was true.

After all, there was something that I wanted to talk to them about.

It was just that after receiving their affirmation, it was a bit hard to bring up with the nice atmosphere that had formed.

Once again, the duke brought up the topic for me by saying, "It has something to do with the wyvern, right? That's the only reason you would come in such a manner."

I was surprised at first, but then I calmed down.

It wasn't strange that the duke would be able to see through me like this, there was a reason why he had been able to remain a duke and rule over this large city for so long.

He definitely wasn't not a person without any skills at all.

Since he had already seen through me, then there was no need for me to hold back.

With a nod, I said, "That's right, I have something that I have to discuss with you related to the wyverns."

When he finished hearing what I had to say, the duke looked at me with a shocked look.

It wasn't just the duke, even the duchess couldn't believe what I had just said.

After a long silence, the duke said, "Could you repeat that again, I don't think I heard you clearly."

With a nod, I said, "I want to give you some wyverns so you can train some wyvern riders."

The duke still had the same shocked look on his face when he heard this before suddenly knitting his brows and asking, "How will this work? How many are you planning on giving us? Does the royal family know about this?"

There was a flurry of questions that came at me, but that wasn't strange either.

So I just calmly replied to all of the questions.

At first, I had been planning on giving fifty wyverns to the duke, but I changed my mind afterwards. After seeing how accepting they were of me, my trust in the duke had grown and I decided to give them a hundred wyverns.

It would be a good thing if the duke had a hundred wyvern riders so he would be able to stay safe.

After all, Veronica would surely be sad if anything happened to her parents.

As for telling the royal family, I had already informed the fourth prince that I would be giving wyverns to people that I knew, so there was no need to worry about the royal family doing something about this.

The royal family already knew that it was impossible to monopolize this, so the fourth prince trusted me in finding people that could be trusted to care for the wyverns.

Once I answered all of his questions, the duke fell silent again.

With the look on his face, it was clear that he was thinking about the pros and cons of this matter, so I didn't say a thing as I waited for him to finish thinking this through.

After a long silence, the duke finally gave a determined nod as he said, "Alright, I'll, take these wyverns."

I had already expected him to say this, but I could still admire his determination in this matter.

It was clear that he wasn't certain that this would be a safe matter for him, but he was willing to take this risk which was admirable.

I said with a nod, "You won't regret this. I promise that you'll see just how useful these wyverns are."

The duke looked at me with a faint smile as he said, "I'm not doing this because of that. I'm doing this because you are my son in law."

I was caught off guard by this sudden statement from him, but I still said with a nod, "Thank you."

It seemed that I would have a good relationship with Veronica's family from now on.
