

Chapter 126 Everything Is Orchestrated

Rhonda's words agitated Diana.

As she was about to slap Rhonda, Rhonda had already braced herself and promptly seized her wrist.

"Diana, you can try anything against me, but I won't let you off the hook for hurting my brother."

Rhonda recalled that a few days ago, Eliam had mentioned that Leonard was battling severe depression due to his slow recovery training, and he had even attempted suicide several times.

Thinking about this, Rhonda's hatred for Diana intensified, her teeth clenched in anger.

"Bitch, what can you do to me? Do you have any proof that I'm responsible for your brother's injury?"

Diana fumed and said, "Even if you know it was the man with the scar who attacked your brother, so what? As soon as I pleaded with Eliam, he readily bailed him out."

She paused and scoffed, "Rhonda, you're just a woman Richard forced Eliam to marry. He's never liked you from the start. You have no sense of self-worth. You're truly a pathetic bitch."

Rhonda didn't show any fear. "Diana, why are you attacking me like this? Are you insecure about yourself?"

Diana was infuriated when she heard that.

"You won't be so sure of yourself any longer. One day, I'll make sure Eliam divorces you. You just wait and see!"

With that, Diana pulled out her phone and called Eliam. The moment she began speaking, she broke into tears.

"Eliam, come back quickly. Rhonda's been tormenting me..."

Diana lodged her complaint first.

Indifferent, Rhonda turned and entered the room, only to discover that Diana had taken over her space and redecorated it in a pink theme.

She opened the wardrobe to find it filled with Diana's clothes. Half of the cabinet that once housed Eliam's suits was now occupied by Diana's dresses.

Rhonda surveyed the room and didn't find any of Eliam's personal belongings.

It seemed that while Rhonda was away, Eliam hadn't slept with Diana, which provided her some solace.

"Eliam has said this room is mine now. Please don't touch my things." Diana strutted into the room proudly and sat on the chair Rhonda had bought.

"Maybe you're not aware that when I was a child, I shared this room with Eliam. I occupied the inner room, and he stayed in the outer one. Every night, he would tell me bedtime stories before we slept."

"I don't care about your history. All I know is that he's my husband now." Rhonda scoffed and exited the room, feeling lightheaded from the overpowering perfume.

She wondered if Diana was unaware that Eliam disliked the scent of perfume.

Rhonda settled in a lounge chair in the yard, where the part-time worker served her a cup of coffee.

As she browsed the internet for comments on Sloan Corporation's lawsuit against Eden Accounting, she awaited Eliam's arrival.

A few days prior, those who had blamed Sloan Corporation for Dolores' death suddenly changed their tune. They began to criticize Eden Accounting for its audacity in exploiting the partnership to have an employee steal confidential information from Sloan Corporation. They also claimed that no company would dare collaborate with such a dishonest firm in the future.

Furthermore, the internet saw a detailed probe into Dolores' past. It was revealed that she and her brother had grown up in an orphanage and later attended university with the help of a benevolent individual, who turned out to be George.

Rumors circulated online that Dolores had engaged in a relationship with George, enabling her to join the highly selective Eden Accounting.

Rhonda's expression grew increasingly grave as she read.

Initially, she didn't want Dolores to be involved with the despicable George, but based on the intimate photo on Dolores' computer and netizens' comments, she suspected that Dolores and George must have had some connection.

At seven o'clock, Eliam rushed home.

Hearing the sound of the car, Diana ran out of her room and threw herself into Eliam's arms as soon as she saw him.

"Eliam, you're finally here," Diana said tearfully.

"What's going on?" Eliam glanced at Rhonda, who was sitting in the lounge chair, and appeared relieved.

"Rhonda pressed on pressure points on my arm, and it was so painful." Diana gritted her teeth as she spoke.

Eliam remained silent but looked towards Rhonda.

Rhonda put her phone away and stood up from the lounge chair.

"I need to ask you something. Let's step outside and talk," Rhonda suggested.

"Alright." Eliam agreed without any hesitation.

Taken aback, Diana exclaimed, "Eliam, Rhonda hit me earlier. She..."

Eliam responded impatiently, "If you're in pain, go to the hospital. I have something to take care of right now."

With that, he left with Rhonda.

"Eliam, come back!" Diana angrily stomped her foot.

In the car, Rhonda allowed herself a small smile.

Though subtle, Eliam noticed it. "Feeling satisfied now?"

Rhonda quickly put on a serious face. "Why would I be happy when you've let her take over our room?"

"I knew you'd say that. If I hadn't let her stay there, she would have insisted on sharing the study with me. I had no choice," Eliam explained helplessly.

"But you shared a room with her before. What's the big deal about doing it again?" Rhonda recalled Diana mentioning that she had shared a room with Eliam during their childhood.

"What did she tell you? Don't believe her. I've never shared a room with any other woman except you."

"I don't care if you've lived with another woman or not. It's none of my business." Rhonda suddenly remembered something crucial and asked, "Did you take the CD I made?"

Eliam hesitated for a moment. "What CD?"

"The one containing the files from Dolores' computer."

"Wasn't it in your folder?" Eliam said evasively.

"It vanished all of a sudden." Rhonda tried to remember where the CD could have gone. "Our boss asked for it today, but I couldn't find it."

"Is it because Sloan Corporation filed a lawsuit against Eden Accounting?" Eliam inquired.

"Are you aware of it too? And do you know that Daniel manipulated me?" Rhonda's anger grew as she continued, "He even deceived me into collaborating with him and set me up. He used my recording as evidence in court."

"He was forced into it as well." Eliam sighed.

"So, you knew about it, huh?" Rhonda's anger intensified. "I should have known you'd take his side."

"I wasn't aware initially. He informed me later." Eliam clarified, "Business isn't as straightforward as you might believe. This time, someone is targeting the complete destruction of Sloan Corporation. Do you really think they could obtain Sloan Corporation's core technology information just through Dolores?"

Rhonda was getting more and more confused.

"Are you saying there's another mole in your company?"

"Yes, but their objective isn't our core technology; it's to annihilate Sloan Corporation entirely."

Eliam's expression turned grave.

"In reality, everything you see is orchestrated by them."