

Chapter 129 Eliam Came

Rhonda was about to speak when Robert woke up.

She immediately shut her eyes.

Gazing at Rhonda's face, which bore a striking resemblance to Sally's, Robert suddenly felt that perhaps this was God's way of making amends. He had lost Sally, and he couldn't bear to lose Rhonda as well.

"Rhonda, let me protect you from now on." Robert gently caressed Rhonda's face, the cool sensation giving him a sense of reclaiming what he had lost.

Suddenly, the door swung open, revealing Eliam standing in the doorway.

After searching all night, he finally received a call from the police at dawn, informing him that Rhonda's attacker had been arrested.

Now knowing Rhonda's whereabouts, Eliam had rushed over, not expecting to witness such a scene.

Robert rose and stepped out of the room. The two men locked eyes for over ten seconds.

Robert broke the silence first.

"Where were you when she was assaulted last night?" He demanded, "Do you realize how dangerous her situation was? Had she arrived here even a bit later, the consequences could have been dire."

The thought sent shivers down Robert's spine.

"If you can't look after her, you should divorce her as soon as possible. I'll help her repay the debt she owes you."

Eliam's expression was a mix of anger and amusement.

"Have you lost your mind? What kind of nonsense are you spouting?"

replacement for Sally." Eliam's face darkened.

"Do you really believe you can stop me?" Robert looked at Eliam suspiciously. He had a hunch that the man in front of him was not as simple as he looked.

But nothing could deter him from pursuing Rhonda.

"If you doubt it, put me to the test." Eliam opened the door wider and spotted Rhonda reaching for a cup on the bedside table.

He swiftly placed the cup in her hand.

She took a sip of water and felt less painful in her throat.

However, her voice remained raspy when she spoke.

"How did you find this place?" Rhonda noticed Eliam appeared worn out from the previous night.

"Was it Santino's doing?" A dark glint filled Eliam's eyes as if he was plotting how to dismantle Santino.

"Yes, he snatched my phone away."

As Rhonda finished speaking, Eliam returned her phone.

"Don't worry. The police apprehended him and took him to the station last night."

"What will the authorities do to him?" Rhonda asked.

"Are you still concerned about him?" Eliam frowned unhappily.

"I merely asked out of curiosity. I've wanted nothing to do with him since we split. Why would I worry about him?" Rhonda retorted.

"The doctor mentioned that you sustained a severe head injury and need to rest. Don't overthink things, or it'll affect your emotional state."

"Okay." Rhonda wanted to use the restroom, but with Eliam present, it was uncomfortable. So she said, "You have work today. Don't worry about me. Dr. Coyle will look after me. Please, focus on your job."

"I'm concerned because he's here." Eliam perched on the edge of the bed and took out his phone to order food for Rhonda. "What would you like for breakfast?"

Rhonda desperately needed to use the restroom.

"I don't want to eat. I want to be alone. You should leave."

"Why should I go? I won't bother you." Eliam pretended not to understand.

Rhonda couldn't take it any longer.

"Eliam, I need to use the bathroom. Can you please step out?"
