

Chapter 142 The Godsend

"Is there something else?" Noticing that Ella hadn't left, Margret couldn't help but ask.

"I want to know what connection Rhonda has found. Why was she able to make a deal with Mr. Chadwick, the president of Marriot Securities?" Ella said sourly.

"That's none of your concern. Our company is growing, and we need capable people. Focus on closing as many deals as possible." Margret's attitude towards Rhonda had shifted significantly.

"I'm just worried she might resort to underhanded tactics, which could harm the company's reputation," Ella reluctantly admitted.

"The boss only cares about making money, not how it's done. Don't concern yourself with her. Focus on your own team. Strong performance speaks louder than anything else," Margret advised.

"Fine." Ella conceded, setting aside her malicious thoughts and leaving Margret's office disheartened.

At half past ten in the morning, Ableson, accompanied by his lawyer, signed a two-year service contract with Eden Accounting for a fee of five million dollars.

After the contract was signed, Eden met with Ableson in his office. They conversed until the afternoon before Eden escorted him out.

In the evening, Margret announced Eden's decision to promote Rhonda to regional manager. She would oversee the business development of three teams, including Ella's team, Rhonda's original team, and a newly-formed team.

Upon hearing the news, Ella seethed with anger.

She couldn't believe that a single deal could lead to Rhonda's promotion to regional manager. She had been eyeing that position for quite some time and was shocked to see Rhonda snatch it away.

Paget suggested a strategy to Ella. She mentioned Tamara Patel, the vice regional manager with far more experience than Rhonda. Tamara should have been the one promoted to regional manager, but Rhonda had leapfrogged her.

Paget's plan was to win Tamara's support and join forces against Rhonda.

News of Rhonda's promotion spread throughout Eden Accounting.

The twenty-three-year-old woman had skyrocketed through the ranks since joining the company. Her rapid ascent sparked envy among her colleagues.

Some were jealous, while others were happy.

The well-informed Fiona was the first to call and congratulate Rhonda, offering to throw a celebration party that night.

Rhonda herself was bewildered. The contract from Ableson felt like a sudden godsend stroke of luck.

She had previously discussed cooperation with the financial department manager of Marriot Securities but had ceased contact upon joining Sloan Corporation's project. Unexpectedly, as soon as she returned to Eden Accounting, the financial department manager called her, wanting to sign a two-year service contract.

Rhonda was overwhelmed by the opportunity presented to her. Adding to the mystery was the fact that when Ableson saw her, he recognized her and asked if she knew the CEO of Sloan Corporation, Mr. Giulio.

Rhonda wanted to say she didn't know Giulio, but Ableson's expression suggested he believed they were connected. So, she vaguely mentioned they were just ordinary friends.

Ableson didn't buy it and even asked Rhonda to invite Giulio to dinner one day.

Margret was taken aback by this revelation, not realizing Rhonda had such a powerful network.

In the evening, Fiona hosted a small celebration for Rhonda at her company. The event also served as a pre-opening warm-up for Fiona's business.

Rhonda initially thought she would be the only outsider invited but was surprised to find Alivia and Robert in attendance as well.
