

Six Brothers 1061

Chapter 1061 Mothers-in-Laws Will Always Side with Their Sons

Another teacher saw Judith coming out and immediately signaled for silence.

However, Georgia didn't care if Judith overheard her or not. In fact, she preferred if Judith did.

She found Judith's presence at home annoying and wanted to remind her that marrying into the Martinez family was a blessing she didn't deserve. She shouldn't cause trouble constantly.

Georgia was very different from Haddon in both temperament and behavior. Haddon was indifferent to household matters. He spent most of his time away on archaeological expeditions and had become more detached from worldly concerns because of it.

Judith had indeed overheard Georgia's words. She clenched her fists and maintained a calm demeanor. "Mom, I need to talk to you."

Georgia's disrespect for Judith wasn't new. She glanced up. "Can't you see I'm busy?

What could you possibly want?"

"It's about Jane." Judith didn't want to escalate things despite the situation. Janessa was about to start middle school, and she didn't want anything to affect her studies.

But the recent photos had hurt Judith deeply. Not because of the cheating, but more so because her daughter was in the photos as well.

Georgia assumed it was a school matter when she heard that it was about Janessa. She stood up and followed Judith to the room. “What’s wrong with Jane?”

Judith placed her phone in front of Georgia. “Mom, you said you took Jane out to relax because she did well in school. Is this what you meant by relaxing? Letting her hang out with a woman who’s trying to break up her parents’ marriage?”

“Keep your voice down!” Georgia’s initial reaction wasn’t panic, but rather indifference, when Judith confronted her. She was aware that Judith would find out about her son’s extramarital affairs eventually anyway.

This time, Jaxon was involved with a college student who was a popular social media influencer. Georgia didn’t think it was an issue if the girl could give her another grandchild. It had to be better than Judith, who was pregnant with a girl again.

“Keep my voice down? Mom, this is morally wrong. You used to be an educator.”

Judith’s voice trembled with emotions.

Georgia tugged at Judith. “Are you out of your mind? There are guests outside.”

“I know the Martinew family cares about their reputation, but you can’t treat people like this.” Judith pointed at the photo. “This is my daughter!”

Georgia dropped all pretense when Judith started raising her voice. “Why are you shouting? It’s just a photo. That girl is just a student. You’re overthinking things.”

“I’m overthinking? Look at these! All of them!” Judith scrolled through her photo album. “She’s been sending me these for the past three months. You knew who she was all along. You even admitted that the Martinez family had wronged me.”

Georgia sneered at these words. “It was just some casual words. Why are you taking them seriously? I’m warning you. Don’t spread lies.

“What do you mean the Martinez family wronged you? Divorces happen all the time when married couples lose feelings for each other!”

Georgia’s loud declaration was meant for the guests outside. Sure enough, the two of them came over to intervene.

“Judith, what’s wrong? Are you arguing with your mother-in-law? Don’t fight.

Harmony in the family is the key to happiness. You too, Georgia. Don’t get so worked up.”

They weren’t genuinely trying to intervene. After all, they couldn’t interfere in other people’s family matters.

Judith clenched her fist so hard that it was hurting. “This is not a matter of falling out of love. He cheated on me while I was pregnant!”

“Cheating? Did you see it with your own eyes?” Georgia pushed Judith. “I think you’re just restless because you don’t have a job. Jaxon is busy working hard. How dare you accuse him like this!”

Georgia would not let anyone tarnish her son's reputation.

Chapter 1062 I Will Get a Divorce

Georgia had only one thought in her mind, and she spoke without restraint. "Besides, what do you have to compare with others? You couldn't even give us a son. Did the Martinex family not give you enough time?

"You look like an old hag every day. Why don't you ask Jane if she likes you? She herself wanted to go. What are you making a fuss about?"

"She wanted to go?" Judith couldn't believe it. "Jane would never..."

The door suddenly burst open. Janessa stood there, irritation clear on her face. "I did want to go. Ms. Phoebe's really nice, and she always plays with me. Mommy, you're overreacting. Why are you arguing with Grandma about this? Ms. Phoebe's just Daddy's friend."

"Ms. Phoebe is nice and always plays with you?" Judith repeated Janessa's words, feeling like she'd been stabbed in the back.

Janessa took a sip of water. "Yes, and Ms. Phoebe's not old-fashioned like you, Mommy. She goes shopping with me and takes me to Disneyland. She even bought me a Lina Bell plushie.

"Daddy said they're just talking about work and took me along for some fun. Mommy, you're always paranoid."

It was said that women were naturally gentle, but motherhood made them strong. If Judith felt pain before, now she was numb and her body felt cold. It was as if she had lost all sensation.

Judith didn't care what others thought of her, but why was her own daughter also treating her this way?

Judith screamed at the top of her lungs, "She's a mistress! I'm not being paranoid!

She sent me all these messages!"

"Mommy, I have Ms. Phoebe's social media. How could it be her? And the photos don't even show the whole face," Janessa said nonchalantly. "If you really think Daddy has wronged you, just get a divorce."

Judith froze suddenly, unable to utter a single word. She couldn't understand what had gone wrong. Why would her daughter say such things?

Georgia gently patted Janessa's shoulder. "Okay, go back to your studies. I'll make sure your mom stops yelling. I'll order your favorite pizza too."

"And ice cream!" Janessa's voice was cheerful.

Georgia smiled. "Of course. Grandma will order it for you now."

The scene was absurd and left even the outsiders at a loss for words. One of the teachers quietly suggested, "Judith, maybe you should wait for Jaxon to come back and see what he has to say."

Judith's shoulders trembled as she spoke through tears. "Do you also think I'm being paranoid? That I'm overthinking?"

The teacher didn't know how to answer her question, so she could only say, "You need to be more open-minded.”

“Exactly. Why don’t I just get a divorce?” Judith looked at her daughter, who didn’t seem to care about her at all. Her face contorted into a mixture of tears and laughter.

“All this time, I’ve only been fooling myself.”

Georgia shot a glance at her. “That’s enough. Go make dinner. Jane wants pizza, and I will have tacos. Make plenty.”

“Tacos? You want me to make tacos now?” Judith’s tears fell onto her phone. “Your son is clearly in the wrong. No wonder he’s such a jerk! It’s because he has a mother like you, someone who thinks cheating is no big deal!”

Upon hearing this, Georgia slapped Judith. “This is your final warning. Stop talking about cheating. Who cheated? If you have the guts, just get a divorce like Jane said.”

“Okay.” Judith’s voice lowered. “I will get a divorce.”

Chapter 1063 Where Is the Justice.

This sentence made Janessa’s face twist in displeasure. “Mommy, what are you. talking about? I didn’t mean it!”

Judith didn’t look at her daughter because she didn’t understand what kind of child could speak against her mother like this.

It wasn’t like Janessa was only one or two years old. She was old enough to know when to show gratitude.

Judith could accept the failure of her marriage, but what devastated her was that her own child, born from her womb, looked down on her like this. She deeply regretted having her.

Judith's eyes were fixed on Georgia. "When I married into the Martinez family, I had a very popular audiobook. I've been earning royalties for years now, but where is that contract? Return it to me now. I'm going to inform Jaxon to get a divorce now."

Georgia laughed incredulously at Judith's words. "Are you delusional? Your audiobook? It was written by my son. What does it have to do with you? You must be out of your mind!"

"He said he wrote it?" Judith furrowed her brow, a hint of mockery in her smile. "He certainly knows how to flatter himself."

Upon hearing this, Georgia slapped Judith across the face. "Judith Zachman, listen. to me! If you're sick, go seek help! Everyone knows my son has a burgeoning reputation in the writing world.

"Are you trying to exploit him knowing that he's famous? Or are you plotting to spread malicious rumors about him online? Let me tell you! You won't succeed! You're despicable!

"You came from a poor rural area Your family runs a fruit shop in Kingsbourne. Do you really think you have enough education to become a writer? You must be crazy from being so obsessed with money!"

Georgia didn't bother controlling her force when she slapped Judith. Her face swelled from the blows, and she felt dazed, her stomach hitting the edge of the table.

Janessa was frightened at this moment. She stepped forward to support Judith.

Mommy, are you okay?"

Judith instinctively reached out to protect her abdomen. She looked at Janessa. “Do you also think the novel was written by your father?”

“Mommy, what’s gotten into you? If you think Daddy is having an affair and want to get back at him, just say it. There’s no need for this. Please think about me too.” Janessa didn’t want upheaval in her family.

“My classmates envy me for having a father who’s a writer. Daddy even had book signings. Do you really not know? Besides, you struggle to even help me with my homework. How could you write a book?”

Judith’s heart was already in pieces at this moment. What terrified her even more was not just these conflicts, but the very real possibility that she might not have ownership over her own audiobook.

Judith turned to Georgia again. The two retired teachers intervened from the sideline.

“It really was me who wrote it. It wasn’t him.” Judith’s eyes darted around. “I had just become pregnant then and wanted to do something at home. He helped me type...” The two teachers exchanged a glance.

Georgia reached out and grabbed Judith’s hair. “You can write? Do you have that ability? Stop spouting lies. You want to leave the Martinez family, don’t you? Then get out now! I won’t keep you!”

With a loud bang, Judith was pushed to the side of the door. Before Judith could react, Georgia had already called Judith’s family. “Come and take your useless daughter away! Have I not been tolerant enough? She wants a divorce, so I’ll grant it to her!”

Immediately after Georgia hung up, Judith’s mother called Judith. “Divorce? Are you not ashamed? Judith, you’re not a child anymore. You are going to be a mother of two, but you still have such a bad temper! You are really spoiled rotten by Jaxon!”

Chapter 1064 Where Injustice Reigns Enter Wynter

“Make her apologize to the Martinez family now! No one in the Zachman family has ever gotten divorced. She's not my daughter anymore if she dares get a divorce. She's truly out of her mind!" Judith could hear her father's furious yelling through the phone.

For as long as Judith could remember, her father was always like this. It was as if the world had flipped whenever things didn't go his way.

Judith used to think that she had to be grateful to her parents. Now, she understood that it didn't matter. Her brother could do whatever he wanted. It was only she and her younger sister who had to act grateful.

Judith laughed. "Irony. It's truly ironic." Her head was bleeding but she couldn't stop laughing. Her eyes seemed to be shrouded in a thick black fog.

"The world is vast. Yet, I have no place to call home. I just want to know, is a daughter's life really worth nothing? Why did you bring me into this world if you didn't love me? Was it solely to pave a path for your son?"

The voice in her last sentence didn't sound like Judith's. It seemed to come from the west. It was muffled by layers of walls, but it was deafening.

Leo remained still because he couldn't stop an ny of this. He even shared the of this. He even shared the sentiment as Judith. Everyone here deserved to die!

Resentment influenced one another, especially when confronted with injustice.

"Kill them!" A voice echoed in Judith's ear. She felt herself lose control as her hand tightened around the fruit knife beside her.

"Kill them!" Judith lowered her gaze as her palm faced downward.

Georgia saw this and still wanted to kick her out. “Get lost!”

Just then, the door was suddenly blocked by a leg clad in black pants and rugged boots. Her long hair and sleek coat framed a stunning, yet cool, visage. It was none other than Wynter.

Wynter’s hand promptly caught hold of Judith as she lifted her gaze. This support helped Judith regain her sanity. She didn’t know what had gotten into her earlier.

Wynter tightened her grip on her purple sugilite pendant which brought Leo back to his senses as well. He looked at Wynter with innocent eyes as his tiny mouth. quivered pitifully. “Master.

Wynter held onto Leo as her gaze turned to Georgia. “She’s pregnant. You shouldn’t. have pushed her no matter what. Besides, as she said, it was your son who cheated Your son is a scum.

“Mr. Martinez is respected in the archaeology community. I thought the Martinez. family would value reason and propriety. You’ve proved me wrong today, Mrs. Martinez.”

“What did you say?” Georgia didn’t know where Wynter har come from. Who was shel

Georgia was about to lose her temper when one of the retired teachers pulled her back and reminded her that Wynter might be a student. It wouldn’t look good if this incident spread.

Georgia took a deep breath and suppressed her anger. If this really was Haddon’s student, she couldn’t openly show her rage. But she thought that Wynter was an ill-mannered student who failed to assess the situation.

In reality, Georgia didn’t possess any genuine talent or knowledge. Her job and her marriage to Haddon were both a product of her family connections. As a result, she always looked down on people from outside the city.

“This is not the way to present yourself if you’re a student visiting your mentor’s home.” Georgia sneered as she eyed Wynter from head to toe.

Over the years, she had seen way too many poor students who didn’t even know to bring a fruit basket when visiting their mentor.

Wynter held Judith’s hand as her casual gaze fell on Georgia. “And in what way should I present myself? Should I kneel before you? Who do you think you are?”

Wynter’s relentless questioning and final retort left Georgia gasping for breath. “You! You!” Georgia’s finger trembled as she pointed at Wynter. “You won’t be graduating!”

Chapter 1065 I Will Take Care of You

Wynter tilted her head, puzzled. “Graduate? I can graduate anytime.”

“Ha! We’ll see.” Georgia sneered, her anger barely contained. “Let’s see if you’re still this confident when my husband gets home!”

Wynter raised an eyebrow, a hint of mockery in her expression as she understood Georgia’s thinking. From her tone, it was clear this wasn’t the first time she had done something like this.

Though Wynter hadn't attended college or grad school in the usual way, she knew some people used threats of delayed graduation to manipulate students. She hadn't expected the Martinez family to stoop this low.

"Do as you wish." Wynter narrowed her eyes. "I'm not going anywhere. I'll sit right here and wait for Mr. Martinez to return."

With that, Wynter helped Judith into a chair before checking her pulse and observing her complexion.

Georgia was livid. "Who do you think you are? Did I let you in? How dare you make yourself comfortable in my house!"

Judith was dazed by the unexpected help. She noticed how beautiful and serene Wynter was. She looked like a student.

Despite her lowered gaze, Wynter's gentle voice was incredibly reassuring. "The baby is fine. Is there anywhere else you're hurting?"

Judith instinctively clutched her chest. "My heart... it hurts."

"You are overwhelmed by grief." Wynter's gaze swept to the side. "Is that your daughter?"

Judith nodded and squeezed Wynter's hand as she said with a strained voice, "You shouldn't get involved. You might... you might not be able to graduate."

Everyone assumed Wynter was a student. Wynter smirked. "I have no graduation to worry about. Let's talk about your resentment."

"Resentment?" Judith suddenly heard the haunting voice echo in her ears, and her gaze darkened. "I have no resentment."

Wynter furrowed her brow and was about to probe further when Georgia interrupted her. "Are you listening to me?" Then, Georgia picked up her phone. "The police! I'm calling the police right now!"

Wynter stood up straight and her voice remained calm. "True, you should call the police. Assaulting a pregnant woman is a crime. It's best to have the cops handle this."

Georgia hesitated when she heard Wynter's words. Her hand hovered over the phone. She suddenly remembered her social standing.

Her husband was a highly respected figure in the cultural relic circle. If the police got involved and word spread that she had pushed her pregnant daughter-in-law, it wasn't just about the legal consequences she'd have to worry about. People would talk about how she was a cruel mother-in-law.

Even if the divorce went through, the Martinez family's reputation couldn't afford a hit.

“Well, don’t you have a sharp tongue, brat?” Georgia waved her hand dismissively. “I don’t have time to entertain you. You want to help her, don’t you? Take her away.

“Does she want a divorce? Go ahead. The Martinez family doesn’t care to keep someone who only knows how to freeload.” Judith’s eyes darkened further upon hearing this.

Before Wynter even entered the house, she could already sense the formation of a Spectral Veil from outside.

A Spectral Veil was different from an Earthbound Formation. It was formed by the resentment of the living which stirred specters in the underworld. A pact had to be made to activate a Spectral Veil.

Wynter turned Judith’s arm over but found no marks of a pact. This was puzzling.

There wasn’t much time to ponder. Wynter looked into Judith’s eyes. “I can help you, not by taking you away, but by helping you seek revenge. The condition is that you need to tell me what your resentments are.”

“Help me seek revenge?” Judith shook her head. Tears streamed down her face from her dark and hollow eyes.

“It’s no use. No one stands by my side. My parents are ashamed of me, and my daughter thinks I’m useless. Even my audiobook was taken away. I can’t fight the Martinez family. I don’t want to burden you. Please, just go.”

Chapter 1066 I Am a Quinnell I Can Fight

Wynter gripped Judith’s shoulder firmly. “You may not be able to fight them alone, but you have me. I am from the Quinnell family. With me around, there’s nothing for you to fear.”

“In addition to my lineage, I compete with them in other ways.” Wynter was talking to Judith’s soul through her body. “Together, we’ll reclaim what’s rightfully yours.”

Judith paused and looked up with her empty eyes. “Quinnell? As in the Quinnell Family National Enterprise?”

The reaction wasn’t limited to Judith. Even Georgia almost lost her balance. She gripped onto the nearby furniture for support, her face filled with astonished disbelief as a cold shiver ran down her spine.

“Yes.” Wynter slowly guided the black energy from Judith to her fingertips.

This spectacle wasn’t visible to others, but Leo could see it vividly. He moved forward to intervene. Wynter already carried many personal burdens, and now she had this added weight.

Leo was genuinely worried that adding more would lead to serious consequences, especially considering all the personal burdens that still needed resolving.

Judith seemed to regain hope. “I want everyone to know what a scoundrel he truly is. The audiobook was written by me, not him!”

“Okay.” Wynter withdrew her hand. There was a hint of relief. It wasn’t too late yet.

Leo stood beside Wynter. His small figure reached only up to her thighs. “Master those personal burdens-”

“It wouldn’t have triggered such a strong Spectral Veil if I hadn’t left you here. It’s my responsibility.” Wynter’s voice was soft.

Leo, however, understood that it wasn’t Wynter’s fault. It was his own inability to control his resentment which had affected Judith significantly. After all, he always had a powerful influence over pregnant women.

Cume 1056 Ant BPho! | Can Fight

Given his powerful influence, even if Leo wasn't the main cause, he certainly played a role in this. If discovered, he would have to face punishments in hell.

Leo knew Wynter was taking the punishment for him. Knowing that, Leo tightened his grip on Wynter's clothes.

"Master, it's all my fault. I should have noticed there was a pregnant woman here sooner. "Leo kept his head lowered, looking meek.

He had almost let his resentment take over again. Fortunately, Wynter arrived in time. Otherwise, he would never forgive himself if something happened to Judith.

Wynter reached out to pat Leo's head. "It's not your fault. She's barely acknowledged in this household."

As she was undervalued, Judith didn't even have a room of her own and had to share. one with Janessa. As for the master bedroom, it was filled with men's work outfits.

and suits.

Wynter had sensed something was off with the room's atmosphere before and thought something was wrong with Haddon's granddaughter, Janessa. Now, it seemed that Wynter had misread the whole situation. No wonder the atmosphere was strange.

No one could hear the conversation between Wynter and Leo.

Georgia was still taken aback by Wynter's identity. Those nearby her were discussing it as well.

“She... is she really from the Quinnell family?”

“A relative of the Quinells?”

“She doesn’t look like it...”

Georgia had only met Naomi and Albert from the Quinnell family. The former was because she had hoped for Haddon to interact more with this new talent.

After all, Naomi was Quinnell’s adopted daughter in name. Strengthening their relationship would save Haddon from the hassle of constantly traveling around. It would also boost Jaxon’s future prospects.

eter 10661 Ama Quruschi Can Fight

But Haddon remained stubborn, insisting that his life’s mission was solely to protect cultural relics. Naomi had visited several times, but he refused to meet her.

Georgia only caught glimpses from afar but she knew that her entire pension couldn’t even afford a single rim of the cars the Quinells drove.

Protecting cultural relics was no longer as lucrative as it once was. Yet, Haddon. wasn’t keen on maintaining relationships or being socially active, so it was hard to expect much financial gain.

Georgia had then approached Albert and subtly hinted at Haddon’s interest in taking on an apprentice.

Chapter 1067 Better Off Without Such a Child

Albert seemed to not understand Georgia’s words. Weren’t people who managed companies supposed to be smart? Why wasn’t Albert able to grasp such a straightforward hint?

Georgia's emotions were now conflicted whenever she heard about the Quinnet family. The only certainty was that she wanted to establish a connection with them.

But who was this person in front of her?

Georgia stepped forward. "I've met the adopted daughter of the Quinnetts. May I know who you are in the Quinnet family?"

Before Wynter could reply, the two retired teachers suddenly said, "Georgia!" Georgia turned back in confusion.

One of the teachers tugged at her and spoke softly. "I remember her! I was wondering why she looked so familiar. She is that girl from the Quinnetts!"

"Which girl?" Georgia didn't think much about it.

"The true heiress that the Quinnetts brought back. I heard she's in charge of the entire Quinnet Group now. Wasn't she on a TV show with your husband recently?"

Georgia didn't pay attention to programs at all, and Haddon never mentioned anything about them.

"Anyway, just stop talking. Whatever you do, don't offend her."

Georgia's heart sank upon hearing their words. She deeply regretted how harsh she had been to Wynter just now.

“Ms. Quinnell, my eyesight must be failing me. I must be getting confused.” Georgia, adept in social situations, changed her tone astonishingly fast.

“You must be a magnanimous person, Ms. Quinnell. My husband is at fault here. He didn’t mention anything about his relationship with you.” Georgia still thought Wynter was Hudson’s student.

“Our family is always so chaotic. We speak without thinking sometimes. I didn’t control my temper well. Georgia stepped forward, intending to physically support

Judith

Judith, Mom wants to apologize to you. I was wrong. Just tell me if you have any grievances. I’ll make sure you get justice when Jaxon comes back! If he really wronged you, not just you, even I and his father won’t let him off!”

Judith was disgusted by Georgia’s words. She avoided Georgia’s touch and looked at Wynter. “I have evidence of his infidelity. I’ve saved a lot of them. I want a divorce.

and the rights to my own audiobook.”

“Judith!” Georgia’s face darkened. Her voice was low and ominous as if grinded out from between clenched teeth. “That’s enough from you! Jane, take your mother inside!” Georgia called out loudly to Janessa.

Janessa also didn’t want her family’s dirty laundry to be aired in public. She pulled Judith toward the bedroom. Wynter widened her eyes at the sight.

This was the crux of the issues. What Judith resented the most was that her own blood was betraying her along with everyone else.

“Wait.” Wynter blocked Janessa’s path. Her voice was calm and steady. “Your father cheated, and your grandma is bullying your mother. Can’t you see that?”

Janessa was irritated by the question. “Even if Daddy cheated, it’s because my mommy is incompetent. She stays at home all day, unlike my daddy, who excels at everything. If I were my daddy, I wouldn’t be interested in my mommy either.

“I looked at the texts just now. What’s wrong with it? Mommy does need to find ways to improve herself.

“Mommy doesn’t even understand principles that elementary school kids.

understand. Ms. Phoebe is a young and beautiful influencer.

“What about Mommy? She doesn’t know anything besides asking if the meals today taste good or not. She can’t even keep her own man. Whose fault is that?”

Wynter’s thin lips curved into an unprecedented, icy smile. “So, is the lesson your all learn in elementary school is that as long as you’re young and beautiful, you can destroy someone else’s family and take pride in it?”

Chapter 1068 I Want Revenge

“I-” Janessa was about to speak when Wynter interrupted her.

“Your mother was young and beautiful before she had you. Childbirth is incredibly damaging to a woman. Everyone knows that.” Wynter’s gaze bore into Janessa, and her presence was overwhelming.

“But no matter how hard or exhausting it was, your mother wanted to bring you into this world because she loved you. She took the risks for you despite knowing the harm it would cause her.

“She doesn’t just ask about your meals because she has nothing better to do. She cares about you.” Wynter’s eyes darkened. “Yet, you’ve turned out this way. You are unworthy of the sacrifices she made.

“Indeed, some things are common. For instance, blaming a woman for a man’s infidelity. People often suggest that it’s because the woman didn’t take care of herself or didn’t maintain her figure.

“But infidelity is infidelity. The wife doesn’t need to take the blame for her unfaithful husband and his mistress. I’m here today to get justice for your mother. Your father is influential and has connections, isn’t that right? I’ll make him pay.

“That Ms. Phoebe of yours is an influencer? Then let’s expose her affair to the entire world. No one will get their peace, including you, until your mother is happy.”

Wynter walked up to Janessa, her lips curved into a cold smile. “Only then will I stop.”

Janessa had never encountered someone so ruthless, and those words from Wynter didn’t sound like empty threats. Janessa’s face paled from fear. She turned to Georgia while crying. “Grandma...”

“Ms. Quinnell!” Georgia stepped in and said, “Marriage and divorce are adult matters. They have nothing to do with children. Jane is still young. She speaks without thinking, as all children do.”

It was as if Georgia was implying that despite being the heiress of the Quinnell family, Wynter was bullying a child.

Chapter 1069 Wan Revenge

Wynter looked at Georgia out of the corner of her eye as her fingers played with the purple sugilite pendant. She had intended to wait for Haddon to return, but now it seemed unnecessary.

Wynter raised an eyebrow and was about to step forward when her arm was grabbed from behind.

It was Judith. From the beginning, she had been on the receiving end of verbal assaults. She couldn't understand why the world blamed her for her husband's infidelity.

She hadn't wronged anyone. Wasn't the one at fault the immoral scoundrel and his mistress?

For all of Judith's life, she had been taught that a person of integrity followed principles.

Breaking up someone else's family was wrong, no matter how young or beautiful the person was, and betraying a marriage was wrong, no matter how capable or outstanding the individual. So why was she the one being shamed now?

The constant emotional turmoil was about to drown Judith until Wynter appeared and pulled her out of the quagmire. Wynter gave her strength. Judith decided she would no longer stand in her shadow.

“She is the daughter of Jaxon and I. How can our divorce not concern her? She will be going to middle school soon. Some documents might even need her signature.” Judith seemed like a different person now as she no longer held back.

"I gave birth to such a daughter. It's my fault, Everyone must face the consequences of their mistake."

Judith looked at Janessa

as she spoke. "I got pregnant with you right after getting married. We had to choose one of us to go to work. To take better care of the family, I listened to your father's plea and resigned from my high executive position."

"I initially planned to return to work after my maternity leave. Your father couldn't have stopped me. But one night, I saw your tiny face turning red from struggling with the bottle. I just couldn't leave you.

"I told myself to put my career on hold and wait till you were a bit older before. returning. Your father was elated to hear that because that meant he could be at peace without any worries.

"Later, I found out that the company was deciding between sending me or your father abroad as a new manager. He got promoted swiftly after I left.

Judith clenched her fist. "I was naive. I didn't keep a safety net for myself. After having you, I softened and kept lowering my own boundaries. I thought I could endure it even when I found out about the mistress." Judith's tears streamed down her face uncontrollably as she continued.

"I've become someone even I can't respect. I can't stand it anymore." Judith wiped her tears with her thumb and held her belly protectively with one hand as she looked directly at Janessa. "If you find me embarrassing and don't want to acknowledge me as your mother, then we'll part ways.

"I'll divorce your father, and you can stay with the Martinez family. I won't fight for your custody."

Janessa shouted, "Can't you just not get a divorce? Think about me! My classmates will laugh at me for coming from a broken family!" Even now, Janessa was only concerned about herself.

Judith looked at Janessa's tiny face. Her tears ran down her cheeks as she laughed dryly. "You really are part of the Martinez family, Jane. Do you know what truly broke me?

"It wasn't staying home for six months and wanting to wait until you were three when you could speak or walk before going back to work. It wasn't quitting the new job I finally found when your grandma got a mycoplasma infection that spread to her lungs. It wasn't even your father's affair.

"It was your attitude."

"Okay, okay, okay." Janessa was getting frustrated. "I know you worked hard for me. It was all for me. So why can't you not get a divorce for my sake?"

"I'm getting a divorce." Judith's voice grew calmer. "Not just that. Your father's career as an author will also be over. He shouldn't have stolen my work to build his reputation.

"It's not my fault if your classmates make fun of you. It is your father's for betraying our family. I'm not telling you this to complain, but to state facts." Judith's gaze lowered. "You didn't have to know any of this.

"But since you've had meals with the mistress and even said you liked her, you should welcome her into this home. I was foolish to think it would affect your studies if you found out about this. It turns out, I was the only person in the dark."

Janessa looked guilty for a moment before retorting, "Fine. Get a divorce if you must. But do you really have to make such a scene?

"Mommy, if Daddy loves Ms. Phoebe, why not just be happy for them? If you keep making such a scene, everyone will think you're being pathetic."

"Be happy for them? Pathetic?" Judith repeated Janessa's words. Her gaze fell downward and she no longer looked back. She turned to Wynter and fell to her knees.

“Ms. Quinnell, I, Judith Zachman, have no power or influence. I’m just an ordinary housewife. The only thing I can offer you is my life. Please help me get justice. I will be indebted to you for the rest of my life.”

Chapter 1070 Your Faith

Before anyone could stop her, Judith quickly began to kneel and beg. Wynter quickly reached out to stop her and smiled gently.

She said, “There’s no need for that. However, I can’t help you for free. Otherwise, my means would be unjustified.”

Wynter held Judith’s wrist and asked, “Are you willing to place your faith in me?”

“Faith?” Although Judith was confused, she was willing to do anything. “I will.”

“That’s good,” Wynter replied.

The atmosphere within the inner bedroom of the Martinez residence improved greatly. The cold breeze managed to make its way inside the room after the resentment energy dissipated.

Leo couldn’t help but feel happy for Wynter. The power of faith could help a cultivator and protect them during critical moments. Not to mention, Judith held a strong faith that few people possessed.

In truth, Wynter was like a light in Leo’s life. Leo and the twins’ existence had never been welcomed by anyone. Even their own parents had abandoned them.

With everything that they’ve done, those mediums from Mt. Dragon would have probably destroyed them or sealed them up.

They never thought someone would help them exact their revenge and give them clothes to wear.

Leo remembered everything Wynter had done for him. If it weren't for the fact that an unborn spirit did not possess the ability to place their faith in someone, he would have placed all of his faith in Wynter!

"Then, why don't we start now? Give me all the evidence you have. I'll do the rest," Wynter said with a soft smile.

Judith nodded, her gaze more determined than ever. This time, Judith did not need anyone to push her and grabbed her bags that held all of her belongings before her marriage.

Georgia soon realized things weren't going as she had planned. So, she quickly stopped them and said, "Ms. Quinnell, how can you ask them to get a divorce? Everyone will just be humiliated if things get out of hand.

"I don't mean to offend her, but who would be willing to marry her if she's pregnant? Did you ask for her parents' permission? Her parents have been calling me repeatedly to apologize."

Upon hearing this, Wynter paused and turned to Judith.

Judith smiled and said, "Just ignore my parents. They don't want me anymore because they believe I've humiliated them."

Wynter did not say anything. She helped carry one of Judith's bags and said, "Let's go down."

Georgia noticed her words had no effect on them and slapped her leg. "What did my family do to deserve this? Everyone, please help me!" Her goal was to ruin Judith's reputation.

“My son has treated his wife with care throughout these years. How can she want a divorce just because they had a small disagreement?”

“Judith, I’ve always treated you as my own daughter. How could you be so cruel?”

Georgia was indeed a difficult woman to deal with. Her methods were ruthless once she had put down her shame. If it weren’t for Wynter, Judith would have been condemned by the crowd before her.

It was obvious that it wasn’t Georgia’s first time using such an underhanded method to harass Judith.

Georgia believed that Wynter would back away after her little stunt. After all, Wynter was still engaged to someone from the Yarwood family and had to pay attention to her reputation.

Unfortunately, Georgia’s plan was nothing but wishful thinking. Wynter watched as Georgia continued to shout. She even took out her phone to film Georgia.

Georgia had not confronted Wynter, nor had she seen Wynter in action. She thought she had gained the upper hand when Wynter left without another word, so she was still feeling smug when...
