

Snatched 474

Chapter 474 Exactly the Same?

The moment the video call was connected, Jerry's handsome face appeared on the screen.

"Good morning, beauty."

He was joky even in the early morning.

"Jerry, what's the matter? Is it Martin..."

Cora was worried.

She felt the background behind Jerry was somehow familiar.

"Martin is here."

Jerry first gave Cora a close-up view of Martin, who was smiling happily.

That bright smile instantly melted Cora's heart.

The gloom just now seemed to have been swept away in an instant.

But as she cheered up, Cora suddenly realized why the background looked so familiar.

"Are you in New York?"

Cora asked because she saw the landmark building in New York Station flash by behind Jerry just now.

"Correct! A loving hug award for the toothache patient."

Jerry opened his arms jokingly.

"Why did you come here? Are you nearing the station now?"

Cora was both surprised and angry about the arrival of Jerry and Martin.

"Martin couldn't sleep last night because he wanted to hear you tell the story about his father saving the universe. And I could only promise to take him here early in the morning to listen to your story. He finally went to sleep after that."

Jerry shrugged helplessly and said, "And yes, we are at the station. But didn't you say that your brother can't know about Martin's existence? So we will stay at a hotel, and you can come when you are free."

This was also Cora's plan.

It was true that she couldn't take Martin to the apartment with her.

She and Byron had lived in the apartment for quite some time during the past four years, and many people knew them.

Martin resembled Byron a lot, and people would easily make the connection if they saw Martin.

On one hand, Cora didn't want Gabe to find out about Martin.

On the other hand, she was even more worried that Byron would blackmail her with Martin if he should know about Martin's existence because he resented her now.

"Then find a hotel nearby and send me the location. I'll go find you later."

After the video call, Cora left everything off and hurried back to the apartment. After taking a shower, she changed her clothes and rushed out.

At the same time, Jerry led Martin to the exit of the station.

It got more and more crowded as they walked out.

Martin was short, so he could only see the legs of the adults when he looked up.

He held Jerry's hand, but the chaotic crowd separated them.

Martin looked around nervously but couldn't find Jerry.

Just when he was about to cry, a male voice sounded behind him.

"Hey, kid. Why are you alone?"

When Martin turned around, he saw a young and handsome face.

Although Martin couldn't speak, he remembered what Lucy and Cora had taught him about safety. He should never go with strangers.

But the stranger said again, "Hey! Why do you look so familiar!

"Byron! Yes! Why do you look like Byron?"

After thinking about it, Harry suddenly realized why he was so shocked when he saw Martin.

It was because this kid's face looked almost the same as Byron's.

"Are you Byron's child?"

Even though Martin clearly rejected him, Harry wouldn't leave Martin alone.

Recently, Harry had often been attracted to cute kids on the street. Maybe it was because he was getting older, or maybe because he still didn't have a child with Jane after being married for so long.

His peers became fathers one after another, and it made him envious.

That was why he saw Martin alone in the crowd at a glance just now.

After finding Martin resembled Byron so much, he had more reason not to leave him alone.