Chapter 488 Will Get People Killed!

At this time, Byron was also in Nora's hospital ward.

Besides him, there were Lydia and other Hansen family brothers.

Everyone had a happy smile on their face.

"Mom, that's great."

"Now that Byron is back, and you are starting to recover, our family can be whole again."

Almost everyone was chattering, expressing their joy at Nora's recovery.

"Is this oral liquid really working?"

Hearing Byron's question, Nora quickly smiled and said, "Yeah. I took the medicine the hospital prescribed daily, and it didn't seem to work. But since I drank this oral liquid, I feel that my body is getting better and better every day."

She also said, "I know you still have prejudices against Jane, but we should be thankful to her this time.

And the more I think about it now, the more I feel that what the fortune teller said at the time that she is our family's lucky star is really true."

Speaking of this, she couldn't help but say, "If you had listened to me and stayed with her back then, you wouldn't have suffered that much afterward."

But after these words, seeing that Byron's expression was still a little gloomy, and he didn't respond to her, she could only circle back by herself.

"It's useless to regret it now. She's already married, and she and Harry are living a good life. It's a pity..."

Although she did not like what Sara did before, she had to admit that if it wasn't for Cora, the two families wouldn't have had such an ugly fight, and Sara wouldn't have gone too far.

So after much deliberation, everything was Cora's fault.

"I don't have any prejudices. She switched to traditional medicine halfway through, and her previous medical talent was not considered extraordinary. It was all operated by the Yoris family behind her back. Suddenly, she made this breakthrough achievement that dozens of other traditional medicine doctors couldn't do for tens of years. It's unbelievable."

Yes, Byron's instinct told him this matter was full of weirdness.

"No matter how incredible it is, it's good that Grandma is back to good health. Let's have a party at home today."

Eason came into the ward at some point, also joined the conversation, and made a suggestion.

Lydia and others echoed the suggestion, and Nora thought it was a good idea and said, "Then let's have a party at home."

She also said, "Byron, bring Carter and Elena too. It's not easy for them to follow you these few years."

In fact, Nora had other plans besides entertaining these people.

Byron didn't know what Nora wanted to do, so he nodded in response, "I'll let them know later."

Therefore, the Hansen family's small celebration party was decided.

However, Cora got the unbelievable news from her side.

"What? Nora decided to check out from the hospital?"

Sadie nodded. "Yes, I just received the notice. There was no one in Madam Hansen's room when I went there. I heard that Mr. Hansen personally picked her up."

"Isn't this nonsense? There is still 50% of the lesion, and if the treatment is suddenly interrupted, the disease may come back."

Cora was extremely worried.

Although she had many successfully cured cases, she never suspended treatment in the middle.

So she wouldn't dare to predict what kind of impact the sudden treatment interruption would have on Nora.

"I heard many doctors advised Madam Hansen to continue to stay in the hospital for observation, but

Madam Hansen insisted on leaving. She said that staying in the hospital would have no effect anyway, so she might as well go back and keep taking the medicine Dr. Yoris prescribed."

Sadie also said, "I also heard that many patients are now discharged themselves from the hospital and went to Dr. Yoris for medicine. If this trend does not stop, I don't know how many people will die."
