

Snatched 489

Chapter 489 Blatant Snatching?

Cora wouldn't mind if Jane just pretended to claim the results.

She never wanted to be famous anyway.

But now, the sensation caused by Jane's fraudulent claims had caused countless cancer patients to give up treatment, which would definitely kill many people.

So after thinking it over and over again, Cora called Jane and asked her out to meet.

The place where the two met was set at a coffee shop near the First Hospital.

It was still where they were when they met four years ago, and they were still the same two people.

It was just that compared to four years ago, Jane's dress was more elegant and luxurious.

In addition, she also wore big sunglasses and a mask on her face, like a big star who was afraid of being recognized when she went out.

Seeing Cora, she just nodded slightly, with a superior attitude. "What do you want from me?"

"I heard that you became the first person to cure cancer." Cora took a sip of coffee.

"Well, do you also want to ask me for help?" Jane also took a sip of coffee, but she always felt that the taste of coffee was a bit weird, which made her nauseous.

So she quickly put down the coffee.

Cora didn't want to beat around the bush with her, so she went straight to the point.

"Yes, I would like to ask you for help. Please issue a statement immediately, saying that the one who cures cancer is not you but me!"

But Jane laughed angrily. "Dr. Lane, please visit the psychiatry department if you are sick. I have seen people who want to plagiarize the results of others, but I have never seen someone so shameless as you and just openly robbed."

"Yeah, I've never seen someone so shameless like you. Do you think Madam Hansen's situation really reversed after drinking your oral liquid? That was because I secretly added my own refining medicine to some of her medicines. I didn't expect you to claim it as your own in just two days."

But even though Cora had explained the ins and outs, Jane still took it as a joke.

"You? You're just a cardiologist, and you consider yourself a traditional doctor?"

"I have been studying traditional medicine in Leucrest Town for the past four years," Cora said.

"So because you study it and just got a few medicines, are you going to rob me of my research results?"

"This is not your result. I have cured many people in Leucrest Town. If you don't believe me, you can go and ask."

Cora tried her best to calm herself down. "Jane, the doctor is benevolent! I don't want so many patients to pay the price of their lives for you. You'd better make a statement immediately."

But how could Jane listen to it? "Then I also advise you, if you don't want the world to laugh at you, you'd better put away your stupid thoughts."

At this point, Cora could see that Jane insisted on occupying this achievement.

"Then you'd better pray that the impact isn't that serious this time. Otherwise, even the gods won't be able to keep you."

Cora left quickly after saying this.

She couldn't take care of the other patients for the time being, but she still had to be responsible for Nora.

When Cora left, Jane received a call from Sara.

"Why the hell is that little bitch looking for you?"

When Cora called Jane just now, Sara happened to be by her side.

So she was also very curious how this little bitch who had been absent for four years found Jane.

"She said she wants me to make a statement that she is the one who cured cancer and not me."

"Is she crazy? So blatantly stealing the fruits of other people's labor? Is she still in the coffee shop? I'll go over now and tear her mouth apart. She wants to steal everything from you, even the research results. What more does she want?"

Sara was in a hurry and wanted to seek justice for Jane.

"She's gone. You don't need to come over. I'll go home now."

Jane finished talking with Sara and took another sip of coffee.

But after drinking it, her stomach was overwhelmed, and she couldn't help but retch.

Seeing this, the waiter hurried up. "Miss, are you okay?"

"It's fine. I'm fine..."

Though Jane said she was fine, her face paled a lot in an instant because she suspected she might be pregnant.

But that was not right, she and Harry had been using contraception all the time. How could she get pregnant?