

Chapter 38 Disturbance

Ember had been working for many years and had the basic ability to handle situations. She hadn't decided to resign from the company yet, so she didn't plan to have a falling-out with anyone. Even if she wanted to quit, she wouldn't speak in a disrespectful manner in order to leave herself a way out.

Besides, in Ember's eyes, Rose posed no threat at all. She had always treated her as if she were invisible and had never bothered to argue with her.

"Director William, I know you're a magnanimous person and have never stooped to her level. But I want to ask, why hasn't she been released from the police station?"

"Hasn't she been released yet? Women fighting is just a trivial matter. It would have been nothing if she hadn't insisted on calling the police and dragging me to the police station yesterday. I didn't take it seriously at all," Ember asked knowingly and then began to play innocent.

She felt a twinge of delight when she saw Ethan's furrowed brow.

Previously, she truly hadn't bothered to retaliate, including the incident with David. In her mind, it takes two to tango. Even if Rose tried to seduce him, as long as David himself wasn't swayed, he wouldn't do anything to betray her.

She blamed only herself for that matter-for loving the wrong person.

But Ember still remembered the words Rose had clearly said in the interrogation room yesterday, words that aimed to frame her.

One important reason she didn't call Alexander to find out the truth before coming here was that she didn't want to know. Ignorance is bliss. Rose was used to being arrogant and domineering, so locking her up and teaching her a lesson would prevent her from causing harm to others in the future.

Ethan couldn't get any answers out of Ember, and he was extremely frustrated.

Last night, someone had leaked information that in order to rescue his niece, he had to start with Ember.

He had never expected that a plain design director in his company would have such a powerful figure backing her behind the scenes. Ethan had truly underestimated Ember.

"Director William, I know your character very well. If you weren't a good person, I wouldn't have appointed you as the design director with such a high position in the company. Although you don't know about Rose's situation, I still ask you to show some leniency towards her. I've heard about what happened between you two yesterday from staffs at the company. Rest assured, when she is released, I will not only discipline her properly, but I will also make her apologize to you face to face."

Ethan had already reached this point in the conversation, and Ember couldn't continue to act arrogant. He still had to earn a living under Ethan's command, and offending the boss was never a wise move.

"Sir, I'll try to find a solution for Rose's situation. I'm not sure if my methods will be effective, but I'll do my best."

Those words could be considered her declaration.

Ethan immediately smiled upon hearing that.

He didn't doubt Ember's abilities and replied directly, "Director William, we'll be waiting for your good news regarding Rose."

"Chairman, I truly don't know the outcome of this situation. But I promise you, I will do my best."

With no knowledge of the specific circumstances, that was the only answer Ember could give.

"William."

As Ember left Ethan's office, a stylish middle-aged woman passed by her side and hurriedly headed towards Ethan's office, visibly angry. After both she and the fashionable middle-aged woman passed each other, the middle-aged woman suddenly stopped and called out to Ember, who was already walking away.

Ember stopped and turned around.

When she saw the middle-aged woman who had called out to her, she recognized her as Rose's mother.

"Hello, may I ask who you are?"

Even though she recognized her, she didn't want to address her as "madam" and simply pretended not to know her.

Without answering Ember, Rose's mother rushed towards her, raising the bag in her hand and aiming it at Ember's head without hesitation. "You locked up my daughter, causing her suffering inside. You wicked little witch, I'll smash you to death today."

Ember used her arm to block the bag that came crashing down suddenly. It didn't hit her the first time, but then the woman lunged again for a second strike.

On the third strike, Ember grabbed hold of the bag, swung at her and calmly said, "Madam, is there some misunderstanding between us?"

"What misunderstanding? You locked up my daughter in the police station and won't let her out. Now you're pretending to be a good person in front of me. No wonder my daughter said you're a scheming bitch, saying that you want to steal my son-in-law, David. Now it seems that what she said is indeed true. You are the scheming bitch she described, someone our entire family needs to be on guard against."

Rose's mother's loud curses attracted the attention of many executives, even on the top floor.

She still wasn't satisfied with just cursing. After snatching her bag back from Ember's grip, she swung it again, ready to strike her.
