

Star of Space 338

Chapter 338 It was you who did it!

He instinctively wanted to refuse at that time, but when he thought about how to treat his aunt, he had to rely on the little girl in front of him. Maybe blood collection was very important?

"This... I can't make the decision at the moment. I wonder if the girl can wait until noon, when I go to report to my father, and then make a decision?"

"That's fine.

Lin Caisang nodded in agreement.

After all, the blood was taken from the body of the royal family. People said that the royal family was talkative, so she could afford to wait.

"Aunt Bai, go and get some pen and ink. I'll write a prescription for the eldest princess first. The eldest prince is about to enter the palace, so he asked the imperial doctor to take a look and immediately go get the medicine and brew it."

"Yes, old slave, go now.

Aunt Bai immediately ordered the maid to bring pens, ink, paper and inkstones.

This place was just outside the study, and everything was ready-made. Lin Caisang wrote two copies of the same prescription, and gave one to the prince and the other to Aunt Bai.

"Aunt Bai, is there a pharmacy in this princess's house?" she asked.

"some."

"Then Aunt Bai can first order someone to prepare the medicine on the prescription and boil it. When the prince comes back from the palace, he and the eldest princess can take the medicine immediately. There is no need to wait in vain. The eldest princess's body can also be relieved as soon as possible."

Lin Caisang explained.

"Yes, Miss Langzhong, you are still thoughtful." Aunt Bai responded repeatedly.

"Also, Aunt Bai, the two bowls written on my prescription are two large bowls, not the small bowls for holding medicine. The eldest princess has been in a coma for a long time, so she definitely shouldn't drink anything too exciting in her belly. You have to drink a weak decoction."

Lin Caisang explained again.

"You can also add half a chicken or quail to the medicinal soup I prescribed, boil it together, skim off the oil, and give it to the eldest princess to drink like tea. Drink a little less each time. Drink a few more times, drink a few more times while it's warm on the stove, got it?"

"I understand, I understand." Aunt Bai responded.

The sound of splashing kept coming, and it wasn't until the bowl of millet porridge was finished that Lin Caisang put down the bowl and looked at Ya Molian, who was looking at her with a smile on the other side.

"Brother Mo Lian, this porridge is really delicious, why don't you drink it?"

"Would you like another bowl? I've been through too much." Ya Molian asked her softly.

Hearing this, Lin Caisang shook his head and said, "I won't drink anymore. You can drink."

Maybe it was because I lost too much blood yesterday. I ate quite a lot in the early morning and even had a little too much for breakfast. But it was just noon and I was so hungry again. I didn't care that the freshly cooked porridge was a bit hot to my mouth. Just drank it.

"While you are eating, I will tell you about the poison that the eldest princess was poisoned, right?"

"Isn't it 'painted gangrene'?" Ya Molian asked.

"It's 'Hui Gang', but there are other poisons, including 'Luowei' and 'Jubi'. According to my guess, 'Jubi' was the first to be poisoned on the eldest princess, and later 'Hui Gang', In the end..."

Lin Caisang nodded and told Ya Molian everything he knew.

But before she finished speaking, she heard Ya Molian say, "'Luo Wei' should be from someone in my palace."

Lin Caisang: "..."

She blinked, then blinked again, looking at Ya Molian in disbelief.

"Did I hear that right? You were the one who planted the 'Luo Wei'!"

Although Ya Mo Lian did not personally administer the poison, there is no difference between the poison and his own hand. After all, those people are all Ya Mo Lian's subordinates.

"Then you knew that the eldest princess was poisoned by 'pain gangrene', so you administered 'Luowei' to her? Was it to relieve her from the poison?" This guess should be certain.
