

Chapter 240 A Reversal

Aloys made a face, put his hand over his nose, and walked inside.

He kicked the door wide open and looked around the room suspiciously as he shouted, "Come out. We came prepared since we knew how to find this location. Otherwise..."

"Stay still! Don't take another step!"

A woman walked out holding a knife.

The woman looked disheveled and dingy. Her clothing was likewise filthy and tattered.

"Everyone is out to get me! You all came to kill me!"

As she yelled, the woman swung the knife in her hands.

"We're not going to kill you. It's you who's trying to hurt yourself."

Melissa looked at the woman dispassionately. She felt a little empathy for this woman in some ways.

This teacher was only in her twenties, yet she looked pallid and exhausted.

Melissa didn't know who to hate more—this woman or Arielle.

The teacher paused for a moment to reflect. She then laughed as she lifted the knife, and tears streamed down her cheeks.

"You're trying to kill me! That's why you came!" the teacher screamed and placed the knife across her neck. "However, I currently have nothing. I'll kill myself now if you force me."

"Please calm down. We're not here to hurt you," Aloys said, looking solemn. "We knew that someone ordered you to do this. We'll let you go as long as you tell us who it is. You'll have a better future than you do now if you cooperate with us."

The teacher froze. "Why should I trust you?"

"Just by the fact that I was able to find you today, you should know who is behind you. However, you should understand what it means when I approached you today."

"I don't know, and I'm not sure!" the teacher screamed angrily. "I don't understand what you're saying. No one told me what to do. I worked alone."

Melissa scowled as she stared bitterly at the woman.

She didn't even consider Ophelia's prediction coming true. This teacher chose to take all the blame herself.

Melissa leaned forward. "Do you consider your friendship to be healthy? Ophelia told us what your name was. You need to consider this carefully. Do you think it's worth it to carry the whole weight of the crime by yourself in the name of your alleged friendship?"

"She has nothing to do with this. I acted alone! I planned and did everything by myself!" the teacher shouted furiously.

She looked resentfully at Melissa, who stood before her.

"Fine. I'll admit it. I'm doing this because Ophelia told me to. She loved Everett, yet you continued to be close to him. As a result, Ophelia created this mess. Did Ophelia mention that Arielle was responsible for this? Ophelia lied to you, and she did it on purpose."

When the teacher was done, the room was silent.

Melissa frowned. What the teacher said was exactly the opposite of what Ophelia had stated.

She would still need to gather proof if she went to court.

Melissa believed that Arielle was involved in this.

"Do you know the whole story?" the teacher added. "You have all been deceived! Hahaha!"

Aloys sneered when he heard this. "Your statements are contradictory. Do you want to throw us off with your words? You're only trying to cover up the truth."

"He's right." Melissa thought about it. "You didn't hide elsewhere and chose to come back to Andeport. You're not as bold as you seem to me. All you wanted was for us to find you. Has someone said something to you?"
