

Chapter 241 Do You Have a Heart

The teacher's face paled, and her countenance changed slowly. She swallowed and squeezed the hilt of the knife tightly as if she was making a decision. "There is no point in telling me all this! I will say the same things even if you take me to court! I will also tell them you tried to force me to lie!"

Everyone present made a face of disgust at her words.

Melissa laughed, narrowing her eyes at the woman. "Say whatever you want. It doesn't matter at all. We'll have our ways to find out the truth."

"I await that day too," the teacher ground out.

The people beside Aloys walked toward her when he raised his hand, signaling that they should move. "You'll have to come with us for this investigation. You're involved in the poisoning case after all."

"Don't come closer! Stay away!" The teacher panicked as they approached her, waving the knife in her hand frantically. She slowly backed into the corner of the wall. Seeing that there was no way out, she pointed the knife toward her neck.

"If you come closer, I will slit my throat in front of you! Do you want to try me?"

"No!" Melissa yelled quickly.

A figure suddenly rushed toward the teacher.

"What are you do... Ah!" The teacher fell before she could complete her words. The knife, which had been knocked out of her hands, skidded across the floor. The others quickly ran forward in a bid to restrain her now that her weapon was gone.

"Everett?"

Everyone was surprised, staring at the man who suddenly broke in.

Melissa was also baffled. What was Everett doing here? When did he arrive? And...

Everett was in front of Melissa before she could finish thinking. "Follow me, I have some questions for you."

He was in a foul mood. He took Melissa's hand and began to pull her away.

"Stop!" Aloys' eyes darkened. "Does Melissa have any business with you?"

"Yes."

Everett and Aloys locked eyes, creating a tense atmosphere as neither man backed down.

Melissa sighed and threw her arms up. "Aloys, it's nothing serious. I am just going to talk with him for a while," she said calmly, trying to defuse the situation.

"You..." Aloys paused and took a few steps back. "Fine. Call me immediately if anything happens."

"Alright," Melissa agreed.

Everett rolled his eyes and quickly walked away with Melissa.

They went to his car and he stuffed Melissa in the passenger seat before going around to the driver's seat and clicking the lock button.

"What do you want to say?" Melissa asked as she massaged the part of her body that was slightly hurting.

Everett laughed coldly. Leaning over, he asked, "Melissa, do you even have a heart?"

"What do you mean? I don't understand," Melissa said, turning her face so she looked outside the window.

"Look at me." Everett grabbed her chin, forcing her to turn toward him. "Lindsey and Merrick are my children. My kids were deliberately poisoned by someone! It was not an accident! Didn't you think I deserved to know the truth? If I didn't come here today, would you have told me?"

Melissa looked at Everett intensely. "Everett, you never spent time with Lindsey and Merrick for the past five years, yet you call yourself a father. Isn't that ironic?"

"I can fix that, can't I? Even if Lindsey and Merrick refuse to accept me as their dad, shouldn't I have a chance to make up for everything?"