

Chapter 247 Competition Of Medical Skills

Under the suggestion of the leaders of the city, the hospital hosted a medical competition. The doctors were divided into three groups: the intern group, the junior doctors' group, and the senior doctors' group. Then doctors in each group were divided into several teams according to different departments.

It was a round-robin kind of competition, which guaranteed the continuation of the normal operations of the hospital as the doctors who weren't competing could continue working until it was their turn.

The competition that hadn't been held for years was being held this year. Due to what Melissa said at the meeting, all the attention was focused on the senior doctors' group.

Following Melissa, Leilany would take out her notes at intervals to glance through them. Even though she had downed several bottles of water, she was still thirsty.

"Melly, can I have some of your water?"

"Okay, but don't drink too much. Don't be tense." Melissa turned to Leilany with a serious look. "People in this competition can't afford to panic. Stay calm, and try to avoid making rookie mistakes," she said.

"Alright, I will, Melly." Leilany nodded and secretly encouraged herself. She needed to act suitably and not let Melissa be embarrassed. She planned on defeating those jealous doctors.

When they arrived at the site of the competition, there were many doctors and nurses gathered around.

After seeing Leilany and Melissa, however, the crowd made way for them. The jealous doctors who were participating in the competition were standing on the other side of the venue. Melissa walked over boldly.

As she approached, she heard snide remarks.

"She really thinks she can defeat the both of us. She is so hilarious."

"Right?! She even went as far as attending the competition with an intern. She is so arrogant."

"I would be careful with my words if I were you guys." Melissa approached them. "Who knows the end from the beginning? If you lose after talking this much, you will be laid off and humiliated."

"We'll see!" the two doctors retorted.

The people nearby looked at them quietly, with interest.

"Very well everyone, listen up!" Peter finally walked in. Looking at the four of them standing together made his heart sink. The hospital would suffer no matter which side won. It was better to solve it through the competition to minimize the loss.

He cleared his throat. "I declare the commencement of the competition of senior doctors! The competition works by elimination. The three with the lowest scores will be eliminated, and the final two people will compete for the championship."

As soon as Peter ended his speech, the venue became a mess.

The theme of the first round for the senior doctors was "emergency rescue."

They drew lots to determine who would go first, and Leilany picked number one. She moped over to Melissa with a long face and took out the note. "Melly, what do I do? I'm number one."

"Just relax," Melissa cheered her on. "I've seen you practice this so many times, haven't I? There won't be any problem. Don't be anxious."

"I'm just nervous... I'm afraid I won't excel against more experienced doctors," she said tearfully. She was very worried.

Melissa was also nervous. She placed her note in Leilany's palm. "Everything will be alright. Here, let's exchange numbers. I'll go first while you watch and learn from my demonstration."

"Melly..."

"It doesn't matter. I'll go register first." Without hesitation, Melissa exchanged notes with Leilany and hurried to register.

Although it wasn't a large-scale competition, the rules and grading system were very rigid and equitable. After registration, people could verify if she was the first person to attend. Her demonstration would be invalid if she changed the order after registration.
