

Chapter 325 Go Back To My Own Home

After giving them the information and spending extra time making trivial remarks, Peter finally let the doctors leave.

When they got out of the office, Leilany turned to Melissa, her face full of anger. With her hands resting on her hips, she complained bitterly, "I knew it. This has his name written all over it."

"I'm sure your father just wants to see you," Melissa consoled Leilany. "You have every right to chase your dreams, but I also urge you to listen to what he has to say."

"Please stop it Melly..." Leilany began to say.

"I agree with what Melly said though," Lukas interjected before she could finish. He tipped his head to one side and smiled brightly. "I think you are qualified to participate in this visit, regardless of your background. You'll also learn a lot from leading the team. How about you take this as an opportunity to learn things you can't learn in the hospital?"

Lukas' smile was Leilany's weakness. For her, it felt like time stood still when he smiled, and her anger was immediately transformed into motivation. She braced herself. "Thank you, I'll go and see what my father has to say. I hope he'd see that I made a great choice."

"That's the spirit!" Melissa felt relieved seeing that Leilany was no longer upset. She was unaware that a crowd had approached them.

"Isn't that Dr. Green?" someone said sarcastically. "Other interns will soon be assigned formal positions. Yet you are still an intern. Why? Did you fail the examination? Is there a special reason?"

"I think she is from an influential family. She is still an intern, yet she is joining us. Moreover, she is the leader of our group. No matter how we feel, we shouldn't be too talkative. We are under her control."

"That's true, we can't afford to get on her nerves."

It was obvious that they were trying to stir things up.

Melissa looked at the people around her and spotted Maria Jones and Eugenia Myers, the two jealous doctors who she had an altercation with.

Perhaps, her luck had expired. She was running into her enemies too often nowadays.

Melissa rolled her eyes at them. "You know you shouldn't offend her, yet you utter these vile things so close to her. Why do you crave attention so much?" she asked.

Maria was shocked at Melissa's directness. Her face reddened with anger. "Mind your business, Melly. We were talking to Leilany, not you!"

"I overheard you and made it my business!" Melissa said coldly with her eyes wide. "I remember that you were eliminated in the first round of the competition when it was a test from your own department. As an intern, Leilany participated in the competition of senior doctors, yet she was only eliminated in the third round. Do you think she is incapable?"

"You, you are just bickering."

"Precisely," Eugenia chimed in. "Are you trying to equate an examination to experience? So yes, maybe she is qualified to go on this trip, but why is she the leader? We have veterans in this group."

"You really want to know why?" Leilany asked with a sneer. "Then pay attention. Who else is more qualified than I am to lead a group to my house? I know it better than you, so I should be the one to lead."

"What did you just say?" The doctors around gasped.

If the Green Group was truly Leilany's home, then she was the only heiress of the Green Group.

Maria's face lost color. She stepped back. "What do you mean by the Green Group is your home? You liar! You think you can fool us with such a lie because your surname is Green?"

"How about we wait and see?" Leilany retorted.
