

Chapter 351 You Are A Lunatic

"You are capable."

Amidst the wind, Howell inhaled from his cigarette and then blew the smoke into the breeze.

Despite his smile, his eyes quickly shifted to a cold and distant expression.

"While you may not be able to do it alone, Everett can accomplish it, given that he committed to invest in this project just a few days ago. Or perhaps you could reach out to Everett's father and ask him for help."

"Don't push your luck, Howell!"

Melissa furrowed her brow and fixed her gaze on the man in front of her.

She had never encountered such an audacious individual before, but today she witnessed firsthand how shameless Howell could be.

"You ought to refer to me as your dad since we share a blood relation." Howell casually extinguished his cigarette on the tombstone and remarked, "If you frequently visit me, there would be no need for me to extend such an invitation for you to join me here."

The spot where the cigarette was put out revealed a tiny black hole, while the cigarette butt was carelessly discarded nearby.

Melissa was filled with pain and anger as she witnessed the act.

From what she could recollect, Howell had a history of physically assaulting and verbally abusing her mother. Eventually, her mother was involuntarily admitted to a mental health facility due to her deteriorating mental health, and tragically, she was subjected to cruel treatment that led to her demise.

Now, this despicable person was audacious enough to display such behavior in front of her mother's resting place.

Despite the impulse to reach for the dagger instinctively, she restrained herself upon noticing the presence of the two children not far away.

"You needn't bother with uttering such words to me. Do you believe that I am gullible enough to trust you?"

"It's entirely up to you. All I ask is that you consider my request, alright?"

"Alright." With a struggle, Melissa asked, "Could you release my children from your grasp then?"

"Sure, that's simple enough."

Howell clapped and signaled to the men on the other side, who untied the ropes binding the two young children. However, the men still maintained their hold on the children.

A sudden glum expression overtook Howell's countenance.

"I may release them to you today, but if you refuse to work for me, I might consider divulging the truth about their dad and what happened five years ago..."

"Stop it! That's enough! You're insane!"

Melissa was breathing heavily due to her intense anger.

She had a look of murderous intent in her eyes.

Lindsey and Merrick were both still young, and their well-being was always a top priority for her. She was determined to protect their childhood and ensure they remained safe and happy, and she was reluctant to involve them in any adult disputes or grudges.

She didn't know how to explain it to them if Howell actually said that.

Regardless of the situation, her top priority was to calm Howell down and save the children.

She slowly nodded while gritting her teeth and muttered a few words.

"Very well, as you wish."

"Great. Please don't forget what you said."

After accomplishing his objective, Howell chuckled and strode toward the group of people. He released the two children and pushed them on their shoulders.

"Go to your mother. Let her know that the latest deadline I can accept is when the Green Group hosts a banquet on the cruise ship in five days. Otherwise..."

Howell paused, leaving the consequences unstated. His expression appeared ominous.

If Arielle hadn't been prohibited from marrying into the Mayfield family, Howell would not have taken the chance of abducting the two children when Everett and his parents were absent.

Nevertheless, it turned out that the larger the risk, the greater the potential reward.

The Sherman Group would thrive even without the financial backing and help of the Mayfield Group as long as he could work with members of the Green Group.

When the two tiny children were freed, they dashed toward the figure nearby.

They yelled as they rushed, "Mommy!"

 Limited-time offer: 30 minutes of free reading>>

Claim Now