

Chapter 360 A Huge Conspiracy

"Howell," Melissa admitted openly.

She believed there was no need to conceal anything from Aloys.

"Is that him?" Aloys exclaimed fiercely. "How audacious of him! He shamelessly abducted the two children."

"He has always been a bad person."

The moment Howell struck her mother, she realized that Howell was more concerned about his own interests.

However, there appeared to be a connection between the mysterious kidnapper and her mother. Since she had limited knowledge about her mother, Melissa could only consider starting her investigation from Howell.

With a frown on her face, Melissa spoke earnestly. "Aloys, when you return, I intend to question Howell about something. He acted solely in the interests of the Sherman Group this time, but I have devised a plan to deal with him."

"Alright, I will make the necessary arrangements and return as soon as possible."

Subsequently, Aloys appeared to be hesitant and switched the subject.

"Have you heard the news, Melissa?"

Upon hearing this, Melissa was taken aback and experienced a sense of agony.

She tightly grasped her phone and feigned indifference.

"What's the matter, Aloys? Has the news spread all over the world?"

"No, someone informed me about it." Aloys took a deep breath before continuing. "To be frank, I traveled to Europe a few days ago to participate in a multinational corporation conference. While there, I came across Everett."

"Have you previously met him?"

Melissa found these words to be hopeful.

For some reason, she sensed that she might acquire crucial information from this phone call.

She was very anxious, causing her fingers to curl up as she continued to inquire, "He then..."

"We only met briefly." Aloys spoke in a low, deliberate tone on the other end of the phone as if he were revealing a massive conspiracy. "It appeared that he arrived there deliberately, but he quickly departed after making his appearance. The attendees comprised high-ranking executives from various multinational corporations, and their discussion revolved around expanding their business operations in our country."

And then Aloys halted.

It appeared that his words had just scratched the surface of a massive conspiracy, and the undisclosed details were enough to make one shudder with fear.

Melissa shuddered, feeling a cold sensation spreading throughout her body.

She had been so preoccupied with her own career that she never imagined the situation could be so grave, involving such unimaginably powerful individuals.

Did Everett actually become passive and desperate if that was the case?

The image of the person lying in a pool of blood on the newspaper kept flashing in her mind.

No...

She was so nervous that her words were barely audible due to the rapid beating of her heart. "Well, do you believe that Everett, he..."

"I'm not sure." Aloys shook his head in silence.

His sentiments toward Everett were solely negative, as he harbored hatred toward him and no other emotions.

But he had not anticipated the situation to be intricate and the entities at play to be so dominant, so he could not become embroiled in it.

Being a bystander, he didn't wish Everett to meet an untimely death in a foreign land.

"So you have no idea, too." A similar feeling of confusion reappeared. Melissa struggled to breathe as she grasped the case report of a patient.

She wished for nothing awful to occur to Everett.

She was now sure of nothing other than this.

"Melissa..." Aloys sighed and scowled. "The Mayfield Group must be in a mess right now, and confirming the news won't be simple. I still haven't left Europe. I'll take a flight tonight. Please wait for my news."