

Chapter 389 Different Thoughts

"Yes, we agree." Some directors echoed Colin's words.

"It's not the time to talk about something insignificant now."

"We have to deal with the company's crisis!"

"We agree with Colin!"

At their support, Colin puffed out his chest, straightened his jacket, and continued to say, "Mr. Mayfield, although you have a veto, you should listen to the opinions of the other directors."

From where he sat, Johnny looked at Colin.

He knew that Colin was referring to the board meeting last week.

Taking care to look indifferent, he schooled the emotion from his face and leaned back in his chair.

Letting out a deep laugh, he played with the pen between his fingers.

"Then do you want to listen to other people's opinions too?"

"What do you...?"

Before Colin finished his sentence, another group of directors raised their voices and began to refute.

"Even if the group is in a crisis, we can't break the rules. We have to proceed as we normally would, or the group will be in chaos."

"That's right. The chairman of the board is always present. When there were problems in the past, he came up with a solution. It should be no different now!"

The directors on both sides began to lose their temper. The argument worsened as each side tried to voice their opinions and justifications over the other group.

It didn't take long before the whole room was in chaos.

Johnny's eyes gleamed as he took in the lively atmosphere. With a mischievous smile, he shot his assistant a knowing look.

The assistant understood and turned on the microphone. Standing tall, he took a deep breath and warned, "Directors, the meeting time is limited. Please keep quiet and don't waste time."

"Exactly." Colin frowned and didn't bother to fix the scowl on his face as he said coldly, "I am sticking with what I said last week. We need to select a new CEO for the group."

The sharpness used in his threat caught the attention of some of the men on the table.

"Mr. Mayfield, I understand how you must have felt losing your son in your old age. But the group affects all of our interests. I can't sit by and watch as it continues to go downhill. I have brought the most suitable person to take over the position. As long as the board of directors agrees, our group can soon return to normal."

Although Colin said he cared about the interests of the group, he only cared about his own interests.

Johnny snorted, his face full of contempt. "Colin, you are so broad-minded. You claim you care about the group, but who is the man you mentioned? Why do you claim he can bring the Mayfield Group back to normal? Why should we believe you on nothing more than your word?"

Johnny's sharp questioning turned the atmosphere in the room more serious as the directors thought about what he said.

Although they had their opinions, they were all afraid to say anything.

Now that things had escalated, the situation was irreversible. No matter which side won that day's meeting, there would be a major change in the Mayfield Group.

For a moment, Colin stood there, stunned. Looking around the room, he confidently responded, "Mr. Mayfield, I know you think the former CEO was the only one with talent. However, he died abroad, and there is a person more capable than him to take over the company. He has experience being a CEO in one of the top 100 companies in the world. Recently, he has been poached by me."

"Really?" Johnny said with disdain. "So what? How can a person who has never been in the Mayfield Group lead the company?"

From behind Colin, a strong voice spoke up. "You can rest assured."

A young man stepped from behind Colin and patted his chest, saying proudly, "In the past few days, I have thoroughly gone over the Mayfield Group's business plans, and projects that need to be completed, and I have also written out relevant proposals. I am sure that the Mayfield Group will return to normal."

"Yes, he is right," Colin echoed. "Mr. Mayfield, what else do you have to worry about?"