

Chapter 430 Return Of The President's Daughter

Bobbi looked at Melissa and then averted his gaze.

He looked at the medical device's data before he spoke.

"We have to use something he's passionate about to stimulate him. It was not an injury that caused this last coma."

His reply was vague but gave them a direction to go in.

Melissa nodded in understanding. "Alright."

"I need to leave now. It's time that I got ready for work." Bobbi grabbed some stuff before he added, "I'll tell Franco to visit here later. You can also go to work. Everett's condition is stable now."

Stable? Bobbie would think so because he hadn't seen what Everett had done before.

Melissa placed a container of water on the table and began to wipe his face to erase his tears.

She couldn't bear to see those tear stains on his face. She breathed deeply. Then she spoke slowly.

"Everett, I believe you can hear me. You're not someone who runs away from issues. I decided to reveal that matter because I want to move on and refuse to be affected by it any longer. I don't want it to affect you either. That's what I wanted to convey. Now, I have to leave to have breakfast and head to work."

Subsequently, she rose to her feet and departed without casting a glance in Everett's direction. She also did not notice his quivering fingers.

It was still very early. Melissa had breakfast and then went to the hospital she worked in.

Immediately after she entered her office, a figure hurried over to her.

Leilany spoke happily as she held Melissa's arm.

"Melly! I missed you so much!"

"I haven't been here for a single day." Melissa could only smile at her and push her away. "Did anything happen here yesterday? Is there any news about the hospital?"

"Yes." Leilany pulled Melissa down into a seat and spoke in a lowered voice. "That evening, after you departed from the hospital, I went to the underground garage. It was already closed. I overheard there was a car collision and multiple vehicles were towed away. I'm not sure who was unfortunate enough to be involved."

Melissa listened and smiled, but remained silent.

There had indeed been a car accident that evening, and the unlucky person had been herself.

She wouldn't voice these sentiments, of course. She had inquired Leilany regarding the matter solely to see if the events of that night had been disclosed.

It seemed to still be a secret, however.

Leilany leaned in closer and spoke again. "There is more news I need to tell you. I've heard that Peter's daughter came back yesterday. She's supposed to work at the hospital today."

"She practices medicine?"

"Certainly. After all, she is Peter's daughter. I was informed that she was responsible for a medical mishap during her internship and was sent overseas to keep a low profile and pursue further studies."

Melissa's eyes flashed and she said coldly, "I hope she has good abilities. Otherwise, there could be negative consequences if an incompetent doctor were to work at the hospital."

"You're right."

After agreeing with Melissa, Leilany remembered something.

She thought of some gossip and smiled.

"In fact, that's not quite what I meant to tell you. Peter's daughter goes by the name of Keira Cooper, and rumor has it she's both stunning and has a fondness for Everett. Apparently, upon hearing news of Everett's troubles, she hurried back from completing her graduation procedures."
