

Chapter 432 Didn't Take Her Seriously

As Keira recalled the scandalous news she'd heard abroad, her gaze grew increasingly fierce.

Melissa sighed and reluctantly set down her stethoscope.

It appeared that avoiding this brewing conflict was impossible.

She hadn't sought out trouble, but trouble had found her.

"Why are you so arrogant, Dr. Sherman?" Keira crossed her legs and continued, her voice dripping with disdain. "Why don't you reply to people? It's so rude, even for an expert. I bet there are plenty of people in this hospital who can't stand you, right?"

Melissa sneered, looking up at her. Though she wore only light makeup, she still emanated an air of unshakable authority and coldness.

"First of all, I'm working, which means I have the right to ignore irrelevant distractions. And secondly, it's incredibly impolite of you to interrupt a medical treatment for no valid reason. So tell me, why should I speak to you?"

Each word she spoke was laced with biting sarcasm.

Upon hearing this, Keira's anger ignited like a wildfire. She shot up from her seat and pointed at Melissa behind the desk, trembling from her anger.

"Do you know who I am? How dare you call me irrelevant?"

"Who are you, then? Even the municipal leaders wouldn't behave like this."

They squared off, neither of the two yielding an inch, as the directors behind them hastily retreated, pretending they had nothing to do with the conflict.

"Melly, your arrogance astounds me. You just spent some money to study abroad, and now you dare call yourself the Divine Surgeon? You're nothing but a pitiful doctor working for my father, earning a meager salary. I could have my dad fire you at any moment!" Keira shouted.

This time, Leilany could no longer hold her tongue.

Thereafter, she stood up and marched toward Keira.

"Well, can't you see we're working right now? Please refrain from causing disturbances. No matter who you are, it's inappropriate to hinder the hospital's regular operations.

Dr. Sherman is a pathetic doctor? Then what does that make you? Even though some people have studied abroad, they remain nobodies. Mr. Cooper personally begged Dr. Sherman to join this hospital, which is far better than leveraging connections to land a job. Moreover, if Dr. Sherman were to leave this hospital, there would be countless others vying for her."

Although Leilany didn't name names, everyone knew who she was referring to as nobody.

Hearing this, the directors wiped cold sweat from their foreheads. They didn't dare to speak up, and they all held their breaths.

If they'd said such things, they would surely be fired. But Leilany was different; she was the only heiress of the Green Group.

The atmosphere grew increasingly tense.

Keira's face turned grim. She had planned to teach Melly a lesson today, but to her surprise, she was the one who got chastised.

She squinted and sneered. "Fine, take advantage of my recent return. But remember, I, Keira, will have my revenge in the future."

As she spoke, she straightened her clothes and tucked her hair behind her ear while looking in the makeup mirror, regaining her haughty appearance.

"I'll start working here in three days. Mr. Cooper asked me to choose an office I like. I think this one will do nicely. You'd better vacate my office by tomorrow, as someone will be redecorating it the day after."

"You!"

Leilany wanted to argue further, but Keira had already strutted out the door in her high heels.

Leilany, clearly upset, pouted and complained, "There's an available office next door. Why does she insist on this one?"

"You know, she's doing it on purpose." Melissa shrugged and sat back down.

In fact, she let out a sigh of relief. Fortunately, Keira had come to cause trouble on her first day back, rather than resorting to underhanded tactics like Arielle.

As the saying went, it was better to deal with an enemy than a false friend. So Melissa didn't need to take Keira too seriously.

But if Keira was fond of Everett, why did she come to stir up trouble with Melissa?
