

Chapter 433 Everett Woke Up

The busy day was over at last.

It was impossible to know how many patients they had taken care of, but they hadn't been able to take a break all day.

After work, Melissa felt too tired to stand, so she leaned up against her chair.

Leilany was in the same shape. She was staring into space and felt as though she was too exhausted to move.

She took a deep breath and finally spoke.

"Melly, do you think we could just stay in this office and not move?"

"Why would we want to do anything as silly as move out of this office?" Melissa laughed. "She thinks she can say and do anything she wants just because she's Peter's daughter. I think it's time to cash in on some of your father's power."

"I think you're right."

Leilany began to pat herself on her chest.

"Don't worry. As soon as I utter my father's name, everything will work out."

Melissa agreed in her heart. Besides Everett, there were other powerful tycoons in Andeport, such as Zaid, whom nobody dared to challenge.

Additionally, the Green Group had recently launched a project to build a biological laboratory, causing significant interest in Andeport's business community. Many were eager to invest in the project and it was expected to produce significant profits.

Melissa kept these thoughts to herself.

She refused to be frightened by Keira, even without Leilany.

Peter had recruited her and implored her to sign the contract. If she found the job unbearable, there would be no harm in leaving since several other hospitals were interested in hiring her.

She was highly skilled and this was what maintained her confidence.

Leilany turned toward her with something else to say, but she stopped short and remained silent.

The news concerning the Mayfield family from five years ago had recently become widespread. Leilany could make an educated guess about the truth, but her curiosity compelled her to ask Melissa about it.

"What's the matter, Leilany?" Melissa looked directly at Leilany. "Is there something important you want to tell me?"

"No. I'm just exhausted."

Leilany decided not to ask in the end.

She realized the whole situation must be painful for Melissa and not a great memory for her to talk about.

So she'd better refrain from asking in case it hurt Melissa.

"If you're too tired, it's okay if you take a rest here for a while longer before you go home."

Melissa stood up suddenly. She still looked very tired but didn't waste time. She began changing her clothes and packing up.

"Melly, why are you in a hurry to get off work lately?" Leilany asked.

"If I'm getting the same salary, it doesn't make sense to spend all my extra time here just working."

Melissa laughed jokingly as she opened up the door swiftly.

"I'm going, Leilany. Make sure you lock up when you leave."

"No problem!"

After leaving the hospital, Melissa went through her phone. She wanted to see if there were any messages, but Bobbi and Franco hadn't contacted her at all.

Was Everett still unconscious?

Anxiously, she quickly headed to the hospital Everett was in. But on the way there, she took a detour and went to the restaurant named Corniche.

She went to the hospital afterward and took in the food she'd bought. It was the famous fish soup of Corniche.

She'd learned as a doctor the soup would be full of nutrients that would be beneficial for Everett's recovery.

Melissa changed her clothes and then opened his room door.

When she looked in the room, she was met with his gaze unexpectedly.

His eyes were deep and cold, devoid of all emotion.

A few minutes passed and they remained locked in a staring contest without saying anything at all.

The room filled with awkwardness. It was as if the two of them had just met each other.
