

Chapter 440 I Will Help You

"Yes, what Melly said is true." Leilany spoke firmly, stepping forward.

In fact, she had already guessed the identity of the woman from their earlier conversation.

The woman showed no signs of guilt and instead continued to accuse Melly of wrongdoing.

Leilany felt compelled to help Melly vent her anger.

At this moment, Emily quickly came up with an idea and fell to the floor, tears welling up in her eyes.

"You are all on the same side, and you help each other. We come to your hospital to see a doctor because we trust you, but your doctor beat me. Ouch, my hand hurts."

She moaned and gave a pitiful look.

The noise in the office was quite loud, and this was the most crowded part of the hospital.

After a while, a crowd gathered and looked inside the office.

Keira's eyes flickered with cunning.

The more eyes on it, the better. Even if she couldn't get Melly out of the hospital, she could ruin her reputation in the medical community of Andeport.

She could play more tricks on her at the time. She wondered if Melly could seduce Everett at the time.

Keira took a step forward, examined Emily's injury, and said loudly, "Madam, don't worry. Our hospital has always been fair. We won't protect her just because she's a famous doctor. My father is the director of the hospital. He will help you."

Emily's eyes lit up, and she cried, "You have to help me. Melly's the one who hit me! I came in to get an update on my daughter's health. My daughter had previously been treated by her, and now my daughter is sick again. But Melly hit me after only a few minutes of conversation. She slapped me across the face, sprained my wrist, and then asked me to leave."

Then she started crying.

Melissa had to admit, that both Emily and Arielle were excellent actors.

If she hadn't been involved, she would have believed in them as well. Emily even made up her own reason for being slapped.

But Emily wasn't a complete idiot. She didn't reveal Melissa's true identity.

When people outside the room heard about it, they started talking about it, and some of them even started blaming the doctor without thinking it through.

This was exactly what Keira wanted.

With a smile, Keira stood up and shouted, "What do you say, Melly? I have both evidence and witnesses. What else do you want to say? Beating a patient in the hospital is unforgivable. Pack up and get out of the hospital!"

"Don't be so quick to draw conclusions," Lukas frowned and nervously defended Melissa. "The woman's testimony is all we have, but what if she's the one stirring up trouble? We can't assume her story is true because she's hurt."

"Yes, I agree!" Leilany agreed, exchanging a glance with him. "What if she did it on purpose? In that case, must the doctor be wronged in silence?"

"You..." Keira narrowed her eyes and gave them a bitter look.

She realized that the three of them were on the same side.

Keira wondered what was so charming about Melly that even Lukas spoke up for her.

However, she had other tricks up her sleeve.

"In that case, let us judge the whole thing."

"Yes, everyone, please make a judgment," Emily said quickly before falling back to the floor, pretending to be weak. "Don't we patients have human rights? I just asked about my daughter's condition and was beaten for it; why should we come here to see a doctor?"

These words successfully stirred up everyone's emotions, and they began to side with Emily.

"That's right. What kind of doctor hits their patients? She doesn't even know the basics of medical ethics. How can she be a doctor?"

"She has no right to be a doctor!"
