

Chapter 441 Evidence

As the commotion outside intensified, Peter finally arrived on the scene.

The security guards cleared a path for him, and he managed to push his way through the crowd, wearing a conflicted expression, as if he were reluctantly dragged into the situation.

He cleared his throat and said to the people outside, "Please calm down, everyone. I'm the director of this hospital. If you have any concerns, I'll assist you."

After pacifying the crowd, Peter turned to face the room, attempting to appear serious.

"What happened?"

"Dad," Keira affectionately called out to him before telling him the entire story.

However, her tone was firm, as if certain that Melissa was responsible.

"Dad, with so many people watching, if we don't address this issue decisively and word spreads, our hospital's reputation will suffer."

"You have a point," Peter replied half-heartedly, glancing back and forth between Leilany and Melissa.

Leilany was the only daughter of the Green Group, who was close to Melly, while the latter had ties with the Mayfield Group. Since Everett had taken a hit for her, their relationship must be significant.

If he truly punished Melly, he would risk offending both powerful groups.

After hesitating, Peter inquired, "Dr. Sherman, do you have anything to explain?"

"I've mentioned it before; this woman started the confrontation," Melissa responded calmly, showing no signs of panic. "And I have evidence."

Having said that, she winked at Leilany.

Leilany immediately understood, closing the curtains and lowering a screen.

What was Melissa planning to do? Emily wondered as she had a bad feeling about this.

The next moment, she heard Melissa's voice.

"Everyone, if verbal accusations were enough, courts wouldn't need evidence. See for yourselves. This is the surveillance footage of what transpired."

When Emily heard Melissa's explanation, her face turned pale. Meanwhile, everybody else looked at the screen.

The video clearly showed Emily storming in angrily, pointing at Melissa and saying something. She appeared aggressive, while the latter remained indifferent throughout the entire interaction.

Melissa didn't react until Emily began smashing things. After that, it was the latter who fell down by herself.

Through the video, the truth had been revealed.

Looking at the silent Keira, Leilany challenged her. "Well? Is the evidence convincing enough? I believe it's more reliable than baseless accusations."

"You!" Keira's face reddened with anger, and she stubbornly retorted, "Regardless, Melly hit her, and that's wrong."

Peter's expression darkened when he heard his daughter's words, disappointment etched on his face. Couldn't she just shut up?

As he was about to say something to defuse the situation, he was interrupted.

Melissa held up a picture frame, partially covering the face of the person inside, and spoke in a sharp tone. "She tried to break the only photo I have of my mother. You think I shouldn't have hit her? Huh?"

Hearing this, all the people who had been shouting outside moments before looked embarrassed.

"All right. That's enough," Peter interjected, seizing the opportunity to speak. "Since it's merely a misunderstanding, let's put it behind us. As for this woman who intentionally caused a scene, the security guards will escort her out and take her to the police station."

"Ah, I feel dizzy."

The moment Emily heard him say "police station", she rolled her eyes back, pretending to lose consciousness.
