

Chapter 49 Make Sure They Never Find That Out

After half past nine in the evening, Melissa walked out of the hall. Just as she walked outside, she saw two little figures running toward her from the resting area.

"Mommy."

The two children squealed unanimously, drawing everyone's attention.

Melissa was surprised, but she still pretended to be angry. "What are you two doing here? How did you come here? Didn't I ask you to stay at home?"

Lindsey smiled sweetly at her mother to calm her down. "I came out with Merrick and the driver. It's safe."

She wrapped her arms around Melissa's legs, acting like a spoiled child.

Melissa felt guilty as she looked at her two children, for she didn't get to spend time with them during the weekend. Just as she was about to comfort them, she saw Everett walking toward her.

She wondered what he was doing here with her two children.

"Gosh, Mr. Mayfield, you are annoying. If you're bored and have the time, better go and check on your fiancée. Discharge her from the hospital and marry her as soon as possible."

Melissa grew furious. She didn't seem to care when Everett started investigating her, but he was beginning to spend time with her children, which wasn't a good thing.

She didn't want her kids to get associated with him in any way. After all, even a small strand of hair could be enough to conduct a paternity test. If Everett found out the two kids were his children, it would complicate everything.

Everett understood what Melly was thinking by looking at her mere expression. After all, Melly had never been kind to him.

"I happened to meet them. We just had a meal together. Nothing more."

Everett had a mysterious expression on his face. He patiently listened to Melly's tantrums, nodded, and left.

Melissa was hesitant. She couldn't comprehend Everett's expression. He was angry when she scolded him before. But this time, he somehow seemed calm and relieved for some reason. Melissa couldn't help but wonder if he knew something.

"Get in the car and go home. We can discuss your dinner with him later."

Melissa held the two children's hands and walked toward the outer door. She was worried all the way home. She felt relieved after hearing Merrick's words. It seemed like Everett hadn't found any evidence.

She felt better now.

Meanwhile, Arielle was seething with rage in the hospital. She threw the tablet PC in her hand after seeing the information sent by the Sherman family's men.

Emily, who was sitting next to Arielle, cast a disappointed look at her. "You just can't be calm. You somehow managed to make Everett kick Melissa away in the past. Why can't you do that now?"

"Back then, Everett didn't believe her. Everything is different now. He is in a hurry to investigate her and has even organized a medical conference."

Arielle was so angry that she wanted to go to the meeting to teach Melissa a lesson. Before, she was worried whether Melly was Melissa or not. However, at this point, she didn't care anymore. Arielle wanted to find a way to make her disappear from Everett's life.

Marrying Everett had been her ultimate goal. Melly had walked into their life, ruining all her plans.

Arielle believed only she deserved to be Everett's wife.

She clenched her fists in rage. Her long nails sank into her palms, and blood oozed out, but she didn't feel pain.

"Well, the most important thing right now is taking good care of yourself. You very well know the people of the Mayfield family want a child. Even if Melly is Melissa, the children may not necessarily be Everett's. If worse comes to worst and the children are indeed Everett's, we have to make sure the Mayfield family never finds that out."
