

Chapter 07 Admit Cheating on Him

In Melanie's eyes, Elgin Villa loaded all her memories with Everett, those happy, sad but unforgettable ones. But today she returned home from hospital after taking her second course of chemotherapy, only to see Vivian sat smugly on couch in living room. Only then did Melanie realized that she was gonna lose her last Pure Land of her marriage.

"Throw these outdated chairs out. All the furniture should be replace by brand new ones." Vivian directed the movers.

"Put down my chairs!" Melanie stood at the door and said coldly.

Vivian revealed a triumphant smirk. "Mela, are you trying to stop me from decorating my home? Oh, me and Everett's home. From now on I am the hostess, and I can throw these shits out as long as I want! As for you, I didn't invite you to visit my home."

Melanie sneered at Vivian's self-satisfied look. "I haven't sign the divorce settlement yet, which means I'm still his wife and you are only a shameless mistress. You have no right to swagger around in my house!"

Her words drew the attention of movers. They all cast meaningful prying eyes over Vivian.

Vivian's face turned livid. She raised an eyebrow, sneered. "It's just a matter of time before you get divorced."

“Don’t get cocky, or you might end up being slapped on your face.” Said Melanie in an ironic tone.

Vivian smiled. This was the kind of smile that made your hair stand on end. “Is that so? Then let’s make a bet.”

Melanie didn’t realize what was gonna happen next.

Vivian snatched up the fruit knife on table, and made a quick cut on her arm.

“Are you nuts!” Melanie widened her eyes in disbelief.

Vivian stretched her arm. Blood left lines on her arm. She whispered while smiling, “Everett’s back. Let’s see how he will react seeing me injured.”

Presently they heard the sound of footsteps.

The knife clank hit the floor. Vivian fell back on the ground, her face brimming with tears. “Mela, it hurts so much...”

Melanie froze on the spot, dumbfounded. She couldn’t understand why there was a person who would hurt herself just to frame up someone else. A hint of disdain flashed through her eyes. As the second miss of Earley family, she sneezed at such despicable means.

“Vivi, are you all right?” Hearing Vivian’s cries, Everett raced to the living room. He didn’t even bother to cast a glance over his wife.

Melanie felt her heart breaking into millions of pieces. She was shattered seeing her husband hugging another woman in front of her.

“Melanie Earley, you dare! This is not over.” Everett carried Vivian in arms and left, leaving behind a harsh warning.

Gazing after his back, Melanie almost couldn't hold back her shouts in heart. Everett, why are you always turning blind eyes to Vivian's tricks!

Several days passed.

Melanie went to Earley Corporate to deal with handover of business affairs. She needed to handle all remaining issues before Everett took over the company.

Suddenly her assistant came to her with an anxious face. "Mrs. Earley, nearly all our company projects have been canceled overnight. Board of directors has called for an emergency meeting. They're waiting for you in conference room."

Melanie hurriedly strode to the conference room.

By the time she arrived, everyone was already there. She leaned against the wall, struggling to breathe as she looked at the man sitting in the chief seat, feeling a sharp pain.

Everett's hands were clasped on the table, his icy gaze feel on Melanie. Melanie soon realized that all of these were just Everett's means to force her to sign the divorce agreement. He used Earley Corporate as his bargaining chip, but he never knew Melanie had transferred her shares to him.

"Melanie, as long as you admit your cheating on Everett and agree to divorce, Earley Corporate will be fine.” Said Vivian’s mother, Melanie’s aunt.

“Melanie, if it weren’t for Mr. Connors, our company wouldn’t have come this far. Be grateful. Only if you admit your betrayal will Everett’s and Vivian’s name not be effected.” Said Melanie’s uncle.

Melanie stared at Everett who sat on chief seat. “Is this your idea? Me cheating on you?”

Everett frowned heavily. For the sake of Vivian, he had to do this.

“Admit it and agree to divorce. I promise nothing’s gonna happen to Earley.”

She was devastated by his words. Melanie felt the last hint of love for Everett was gonna dissipate. He was so unfeeling, hardhearted and cruel!

It’s not enough for him to force her to divorce. Now he was trying to impose the guilty on her!

This is her beloved husband...

“You want me to admit martial infidelity? Where’s your evidence! Who did I hook up with!”

“You ask for it.” Everett threw a stack of photos on the table.

In the photos were Melanie and Jose, but there was nothing wrong with their behaviors. They looked just like normal friends.

However, nobody in this conference room dared speak for Melanie.

“Admit it, Melanie. You don’t really want Earley to be destroyed, do you? It took your parents great efforts to establish it.”

“You took Vivian’s fiancé from her at that time, and now you’re just giving him back to her.”

“At least take us, take all the shareholders into account.”

These jabbering and gabbling crushed Melanie’s nerves. Her heard dead ached as if it’s gonna exploded. She burst into tears.

“I agree. I AGREE! Is that enough?!”
