

Chapter 1034 Liam's New Plan

Shayla looked back at Liam outside the Department of Defense.

"So, you are a Salvation Society member..." she said, recalling what had been said just now. "That explains your unprecedented hate towards the Saint Society. But, Liam, don't you hold a high position in Saint Society? Despite their rude behavior, I believe the people at the Department of Defense know your value!"

A small smile crept up on Liam's face upon hearing Shayla's comment. Shayla had his complete trust, so he did not bother hiding anything from her.

"You're right. I'm a disciple of the head of the Salvation Society," Liam said.

Shayla widened her eyes in surprise upon his confession. "I wasn't expecting you to have a backer that powerful! But good for you! That way, if I ever decided to join the Salvation Society in the future, you'd back me up, right, Liam?" she said teasingly.

However, Liam just shook his head without uttering a word.

Meanwhile, what bothered Julie was Liam's suffering upon becoming the disciple. He must have suffered a lot. Julie couldn't help but feel sorry for him.

"Liam," she called out to him. "You must've suffered a lot..."

However, Julie's worry was met with aversion. Liam wasn't in the mood to discuss such a sensitive topic, so he avoided it by cutting it short. "That's enough. Let's put conversations for later because we have a more urgent matter to discuss. We can't afford to lose time now. The longer we take in saving Asher, the more we'll endanger him."

Julie's sympathy towards Liam was quickly replaced with worry for Asher when this matter was brought up.

"But the members of the Department of Defense are unwilling to help now," Julie pointed out. "What should our next course of action be? Do you, perhaps, know any other way to find out about Asher's location?"

Liam shook his head. "If the Duncan family set their minds into hiding Asher, it would be very difficult for me to track him. Moreover, I don't have any connections here at Invone as it is not our home ground. For all we know, our arrival might have already reached the Duncan family's ears!"

Seeing Liam's helplessness, Julie felt even more anxious. She knew that it was really hopeless when even Liam didn't have a way around it!

But Liam wouldn't give up. He began to think carefully.

Then, after a moment, he declared, "I can only think of one way now. But I have to warn you that it's not necessarily feasible."

"What is it?" Julie asked, her eyes sparkling from anticipation.

"Duncan family's head is Rohan now," Liam said. "And five years ago, Rohan lost to me. However, that didn't stop him from becoming a sixth-level Primogem Warrior, I heard. Now, to prove himself, he must want to have a rematch and beat me himself. I think I can provoke him and offer a rematch. Maybe, in this way, we can have a chance to save Asher."

Julie frowned at Liam's plan. She realized that Liam was right—his new plan was very unreliable.

Liam knew this, too. But he was willing to bet his life on it.

He was never one to take risks and gamble. Usually, he would choose to do something he was really confident in. But the fact that he didn't have any other choice made him take the risk and give it a try.

In truth, he was not worried about his own safety but Asher's.

Upon thinking of what was at stakes, his gaze eventually became sharp before he muttered to himself, "If this doesn't work, then I'm afraid I will have to fight recklessly to save Asher."
