

Chapter 1258 Spark Beast

Liam delved into the details of the mission, discovering that the uninhabited planetary system had once harbored life.

Tragically, a brutal conflict had shattered the planetary system's harmony, wiping out its native inhabitants.

The war's ferocity had even caused a star to detonate, scattering its remnants across the planetary system and igniting the planets within it.

This celestial fire had blazed for millennia and was only now nearing its end, though embers still glowed faintly.

In the aftermath of the conflagration, a unique material known as spark metal had emerged in the planetary system, imbued with the potent law power of the fire element.

Liam's mission this time was to collect at least ten kilograms of this precious material, spark metal.

While the task appeared daunting, Liam was confident. After all, spark metal was abundant in the uninhabited planetary system.

The real challenge lay in the guardian of the spark metal, a formidable creature known as the spark beast. To claim the spark metal, Liam would have to defeat this fearsome protector—spark beast.

Moreover, the guidelines explicitly warned that anyone handling the task needed to be particularly vigilant about the "spark fire".

Spark fire could lead to catastrophic harm to both soul and body for anyone who made contact with it.

Liam, having committed all the critical details to memory, approached the teleportation array, ready to be transported to the uninhabited planetary system.

Moments later, Liam emerged from the teleportation array onto the planetary system.

Upon landing, he was enveloped by an expansive darkness.

Not a single ray of light was in sight.

Had this been on Blue Star, such darkness would surely have been accompanied by biting cold.

However, that was not the case here. The planetary system had endured a relentless inferno for millennia, making it scorching hot despite the absence of any visible light sources.

Liam estimated the temperature to be in the thousands of degrees Celsius.

Activating his special power of the light element, Liam pierced through the oppressive darkness.

As his surroundings became visible, he involuntarily drew in a sharp breath.

Before him lay the remnants of numerous planets, shattered by an unimaginable force!

Liam was stunned by the scene before him.

The assailants had not only shattered planets into pieces but had also left them as floating fragments in the vastness of space. The sheer power of the attackers was horrifying!

Despite his initial shock, Liam quickly regained his focus. He knew what he had come here to do.

Choosing a planet at random, he made his way towards it.

Liam was unconcerned about encountering a spark beast. He was aware that their strength only ranged between a level-ten eight-star Primogem Warrior and the top level-ten one.

He knew such power posed no real threat to him.

Just as Liam was about to venture deeper into the planetary system in search of spark metal, a sudden voice halted him.
