

Chapter 1269 Heal The People

Liam didn't immediately spring into action. He waited until the first group tasked with the urgent mission to arrive and then prepared himself for the next steps.

However, just as Liam was about to take action, he noticed that the details of the urgent task had been altered dramatically.

The new mission was clear: identify the aliens responsible for the curse and eliminate them.

Beyond eradicating the alien threat, the task required removing the curse to restore the planetary system's habitability and rescue their Human Clan compatriots.

Although the task's scope had expanded significantly, so had the rewards.

Completion of any part of the mission now promised substantial points.

Following these changes of the task, Liam and hundreds of level-ten Primogem Warriors vanished instantly.

When Liam opened his eyes later, he was met with a drastically different scene.

He found himself floating above a human city, gazing down at the high-rises that stirred memories of his time on Blue Star.

Then, he shook his head, dismissing the nostalgic thought. This was the No.105 planetary system, not Blue Star.

Regaining his focus, Liam decided against immediately seeking out the aliens. Instead, he surveyed the scene below, his expression darkening at the sight.

In the human city below, the corpses of the Human Clan members were stacked like mountains, creating a landscape akin to a real-life purgatory.

The condition of the survivors was scarcely better. They were all in dire straits, their appearances gaunt and pallid, resembling the dying.

The grim scene pierced Liam's heart like a knife, filling him with profound distress.

Suddenly, a newfound sense of duty blossomed within him.

His journey of cultivation, he realized, shouldn't only be about saving Julie and Asher.

It was also for the Human Clan and the warriors struggling against the alien foes.

Liam's resolve deepened as he surveyed the scene below.

He shook off the weight of his thoughts and focused on the task at hand.

In the city, a few Primogem Warriors skilled in healing were doing their best to aid the vulnerable.

Yet, their numbers were far too few to manage the overwhelming tide of suffering people.

The cries of the severely injured, plagued by grievous wounds, filled the air—a stark reminder of the cruel curse that had made their existence unbearable.

Even though Liam had experienced a lot before, the sight of such despair tugged at his heartstrings.

With a full grasp of the situation, Liam sprang into action.

He employed his two recently mastered Origin Techniques: Light Transmission and Life Purification.

The Light Transmission's special ability facilitated the application of "Life Purification" across the city.

The curse was stubborn, but against the power of the Life Purification, it faltered.

As the green light of Life Purification bathed the city, a wave of hope surged among the people.

Those near death felt vitality surge through them, their complexions gaining a healthy flush.

Thrilled by the effectiveness of Life Purification, Liam amplified the energy transmission, intensifying his efforts to heal the afflicted.

Before long, the curse was removed from the people in the city.

People then noticed Liam floating above, saving them using his Origin Techniques.

They knelt and bowed, their voices rising in gratitude.

"Miracle! It's a miracle!"

To them, Liam had become nothing short of a deity, a savior in their darkest hour.

When the other level-ten Primogem Warriors accompanying Liam to the No.105 planetary system witnessed Liam's power, they were astounded.

But soon, they realized the limitation of Liam's method.

It only safeguarded the people from the curse.

For a permanent solution, they needed to track down and kill the aliens responsible for the curse.
