

Chapter 1375 Ungrateful

Liam watched as the sword light shot forth, a wave of relief momentarily washing over him. However, his relief vanished as he spotted Julio and Jeremias, his heart missing a beat at their presence.

He had no desire to kill the Ellis brothers.

After all, Liam was not a man consumed by bloodlust, and the Ellis brothers had merely been frightened, fighting for their survival. Since they harbored no malice, ending their lives was unnecessary.

Each cultivator within the Titan Bugs' stronghold served a purpose. Their aim was not to spark a civil war within the Human Clan but to annihilate the base of the Titan Bugs.

This demanded that Liam use additional spiritual power to redirect the sword light, steering it clear of the Ellis brothers.

With considerable exertion, he successfully navigated the sword light away from them, causing no injury. It struck the two Titan Bugs squarely.

Immediately, the sword light exploded with a force that shook the earth.

The pitch-black night turned as bright as day. Waves of sword energy surged outward, relentlessly striking the Titan Bugs.

This fierce onslaught of sword energy swiftly overcame them, and they soon died.

However, the effort to spare the Ellis brothers had drained Liam's reserves of spiritual power and primogem energy to the brink, leaving him utterly depleted. If not for his mental resilience surpassing that of a seventh-stage Primogem Expert, he might have collapsed from the exhaustion.

Meanwhile, Shiloh and his sister were also struggling. Though they were not at the core of the sword formation like Liam, the toll was still formidable. Their shallow breaths were clear indicators of their fatigue.

At this point, only Lindy and Annabella seemed to be in relatively good condition.

As the sword energy began to wane, Julio and Jeremias approached, their faces etched with relief.

However, their expressions showed no gratitude for Liam's life-saving actions.

Annabella, observing their ingratitude, felt a surge of displeasure. With a cold demeanor, she said, "Julio, since both of you are unharmed, you should leave now. Our team no longer welcomes you!"

If this had occurred before, Julio might have left without a word. After all, Liam, capable of defeating enemies above his level, was still with the team, bolstering their strength.

But now, with Liam's strength had greatly diminished, and his combat capabilities had reduced to almost nothing. Julio no longer felt intimidated.

After hearing Annabella's harsh words, Julio allowed a sinister smirk to spread across his face and retorted sharply, "Why should we leave? Annabella, you bitch! I've harbored disdain for you for quite some time! Now that your team is at its weakest, do you honestly believe I'd let this moment slip by?"

As Julio dropped his pretense, Jeremias chimed in with a malevolent chuckle, "Think about it, Annabella. Consider how well my brother and I looked after you and Lindy when we were still in the team. Despite that, you discarded us the moment better prospects showed up! Now, we'll make sure you both deeply regret that decision!"
