

Chapter 1384 The Cultivation System

The revelation about the Human Clan's secrets left Liam profoundly unsettled. He had puzzled over the origin of the Death Power from the beginning, a power so extraordinary that it couldn't be likened to the well-known elemental law powers.

Unexpectedly, the source of the Death Power was traced back to the Sea of Death.

From Annabella's account, Liam sensed the immense power of the Sea of Death.

It was so immense that it had taken all thirty of the Human Clan's Human Sovereigns to divide it.

The full might of the Sea of Death was unimaginable.

Reflecting on this, Liam felt a deep reverence for the Human Clan's ancestors.

Their relentless trials and sacrifices had forged the path to today's harmonious existence.

Caught in his thoughts, Liam sighed. Chad, noticing his introspection, chimed in with a smile, "That's why Everett said that with your total compatibility with the Death Power, mastering it could make you the ruler of the Sea of Death. Then, the Sea of Death would no longer threaten the Human Clan. Just with a thought, you could control all its power."

Hearing this, Liam cracked a resigned smile and replied, "I've only mastered 9% of the Death Power so far. The road to full mastery feels incredibly long. Each new level only brings a 1% increase in my mastery. The progress is excruciatingly slow."

Everett's face showed a mix of frustration and disbelief as he said, "No way, man! Haven't you grasped the Cosmic realm's cultivation system yet? While it's true that at the Primogem Expert level, you only enhance your mastery by 1% per level; things accelerate at higher levels. At the Primogem King level, each level increases your mastery by 3%, and at the Primogem Emperor level, it's 6%. Typically, reaching the Primogem Saint level would allow you to fully master 100% of a law power."

Only then did Liam realize his misunderstanding of the law power progression—it wasn't a mere 1% increase per level as he had assumed.

Liam remembered meeting Ameer, who had achieved complete mastery of the law power of the wood element at the Primogem Saint level. Back then, Liam had been curious about Ameer's swift advancement, but his own dedication to cultivation had kept him from delving deeper into the matter.

Liam believed he had indeed been a bit careless, as he hadn't fully grasped the nuances of the Cosmic realm's cultivation system.

Ever since he had ascended to the Cosmic realm, his time had been consumed by a mix of missions and intense, secluded training sessions focusing solely on his law power. This intense focus had left little opportunity for him to engage with the broader knowledge of the Cosmic realm, leading him to overlook what many considered common knowledge.

However, Everett's explanation had shed new light on the path forward, offering Liam some hope.

With this newfound understanding, Liam felt reassured that he didn't need to become a Primogem Deity to achieve 100% mastery of the law power; progressing to the Primogem Saint level would be sufficient.
