

Chapter 1387 Tasks

Liam looked at Trudy, clearly surprised that she was the one stepping forward.

Despite never disliking Trudy for her previous harsh comments, Liam had never imagined she would be the first to volunteer.

Accepting her gesture without hesitation, Liam nodded and announced, "In that case, the logistics of our team will be managed by Trudy, Shiloh, Lindy, and Annabella. Should any team member get injured, they'll treat them."

Liam assigned Lindy and the others to manage logistics, primarily to keep them safe.

Knowing they weren't the strongest, Liam realized that having them on the front lines against enemies would be dangerous. Hence, it was safer and more practical for them to handle non-combative roles.

This strategy allowed Liam to utilize Lindy and the rest effectively without facing any opposition.

Once the matter was settled, Liam turned his attention to the remaining twelve Primogem Kings.

After a moment of thought, Liam instructed, "The remaining twelve of you will form the first-team regulars to combat the Titan Bugs. Your main role will be to fight the Titan Bugs with the strength of Primogem Kings. I don't expect you to eliminate all our foes; just hold them off as long as possible. Once Lewis and his team take down the King of the Titan Bugs, the Titan Bugs will not know what to do. It will then be easier to defeat them!"

Everyone nodded in agreement.

Then, with a smile, Liam added, "Since this mission requires team cooperation, let's ensure the rewards from this special task are distributed equally among us. After all, we are comrades, and we can trust each other with our safety. Everything will be fair. So, even if we can't transfer the task points, we can trade the Titan Bugs' corpses for special points. When we do this, we'll split the special points based on the number of task points we've collected!"

Hearing Liam's plan, everyone was visibly excited.

Lewis and the others couldn't hide their admiration for Liam.

Initially, their respect for Liam had stemmed solely from his importance to the Human Clan. However, their perspective had shifted now.

Liam treated his comrades equally, and they admired him sincerely from the bottom of their hearts.

Such fairness was indeed rare.

Even though the team's members had varying levels of strength, everyone had their own responsibilities, and there was no difference in the effort they put in.

This approach truly defined Liam as a leader.

After meticulously assigning everyone's tasks, Liam declared, "Let's go!"

Meanwhile, at the Celestial Palace.

The City Lord was watching Liam's actions at the Titan Bugs' stronghold.

Upon learning about the equal distribution of rewards, the City

Lord breathed a sigh of relief.

For the City Lord, the criteria for choosing disciples wasn't solely based on talent.

Character was of far greater importance to the City Lord than mere talent.

Liam's actions had clearly made a positive impression on the City Lord.

Pleased, the City Lord smiled as he muttered under his breath, "The more I observe you, young man, the more impressive you seem!"
