

Chapter 1391 Retreat

As Liam activated the "Fatal Hex", the eyes of the King of the Titan Bugs flashed.

Although its rank within the whole race of the Titan Bugs wasn't as high as within this stronghold, it still held a significant position.

The King of the Titan Bugs was well-versed in the Death Power, a vital knowledge considering the Titan Bugs' primary characteristic of rapid multiplication.

Thus, the Death Power posed a lethal threat to their kind.

Meeting a human wielder of such a powerful law power was rare, and the King of the Titan Bugs saw a valuable opportunity to study and possibly counteract this formidable power.

The King of the Titan Bugs believed by doing this, it could drastically elevate its status within the race, possibly even advancing it to the rank of a lord.

Fueled by these ambitions, the King of the Titan Bugs watched Liam with eagerness...

With the help of the pill, Liam's condition improved significantly. His dizziness subsided, allowing him to regain some composure. However, he had expended a considerable amount of his spiritual power, rendering him unable to battle the Titan Bugs for the time being.

Despite Liam's efforts to kill a large number of Titan Bugs, their vast numbers meant that even the loss of ten thousand of them was not affecting them much.

More Titan Bugs swarmed in relentlessly, continuing their assault on the team.

The sheer endlessness of the Titan Bugs posed a severe threat. Even Lewis, a level-nine Primogem King, felt a sense of crisis looming over him.

The team's various attacks and law powers effectively crushed the incoming Titan Bugs, but this only brought a temporary reprieve.

If the battle dragged on, they would all reach a point of exhaustion, which would be catastrophic.

At that stage, even without direct intervention from the King of the Titan Bugs, the Primogem Kings among the Titan Bugs could potentially annihilate everyone in Liam's team.

Chad and Everett, sensing the direness of their situation, grew increasingly anxious. The latter reached out to Liam telepathically.

"Liam, when can we use the sword formation? We can't keep this up much longer!"

Liam frowned slightly and responded through telepathy, "Don't worry. We should hold off on deploying the Gibson family's sword formation until absolutely necessary. If we use it too soon, it could alert the King of the Titan Bugs. Then we wouldn't be able to kill it in one strike!"

After a pause, he continued, "The King of the Titan Bugs is sacrificing its minions deliberately to deplete our primogem energy now. Given this, we should use this to our advantage. We can feign weakening and then deploy the Gibson family's sword formation when we lure the King of the Titan Bugs closer. If the King of the Titan Bugs isn't deceived, we'll have to face whatever comes."

After a moment of silence, Everett nodded. "Very well. I'll relay the plan to everyone."

Everett told everyone the strategy. The team began to get 'injured' by the Titan Bugs, making their aura appear unstable.

For a moment, the team was overwhelmed by the Titan Bugs and forced to retreat.

Liam played along and shouted, "Retreat! Everyone, back to the cave!"

As the team members hastily retreated to the cave, Chad and the other two turned their gazes toward Liam.

Seeing this, Liam nodded resolutely and declared, "Everyone, our survival depends on this last strike now!"
