

Chapter 1433 Liam's Worry

The injuries Liam had sustained earlier while battling the lake's treacherous waters should have taken him at least three days to fully recover if he had been left to rely on his own cultivation.

But with the Heart of Life within him reawakened, his recovery speed had increased.

In just thirty minutes, his wounds, along with his previously drained spiritual power, were restored to their prime, all thanks to the Heart of Life.

Liam couldn't help but feel a bit astonished.

He had expected that even with the Heart of Life revived, its limits would be hard to push past.

He had figured it would just return to its former state—strong but with clear boundaries.

Yet, here he was, faced with an upgrade of the Heart of Life he hadn't anticipated.

The difference between the Heart of Life before and post-reactivation was night and day.

If the Heart of Life had been still in its previous state, his recovery would have dragged on for at least an hour.

But now, he had fully recovered in thirty minutes.

Realizing just how much the Heart of Life had evolved, Liam breathed a heavy sigh of relief.

Not only had the Heart of Life been restored, but it had received a serious boost, adding another layer of protection to his life.

This meant that, as long as he didn't stumble upon an enemy leagues beyond his reach, he could count on the Heart of Life to give him the breathing room he needed to escape or recover.

A thrill of excitement pulsed through Liam.

On top of that, his body had already reached the level of Silver-Form Body, making him nearly invincible with its heightened defensive power.

Now, with the evolved Heart of Life backing him up, Liam felt confident enough to stand toe-to-toe with a fourth-tier Primogem King for a while.

Once the initial excitement wore off, Liam calmed down.

His mind drifted to the moment before when Emer had slipped into a deep slumber, exhausted after the Heart of Life had drained its energy.

Back when he had faced off against the Primogem Emperor of the Blood Clan during a perilous mission, he had known that without Emer's selfless sacrifice—draining all its energy to pull him through—he would have never survived long enough for Caden and Christos to arrive and help him.

From that moment on, Liam could never see Emer as just a tool he owned.

Emer had become an irreplaceable companion to him.

Their bond had grown into something more meaningful.

Now, with the Heart of Life reawakened, Liam thought of Emer.

With this in mind, Liam called out to Emer in his heart.

But to his disappointment, there was no answer.

A heavy silence lingered in his chest, and Liam's brow furrowed in concern.

His mood took a sharp dive as he muttered, "What's going on? Emer still hasn't woken up?"

Worry began to coil around Liam's thoughts.

The lack of response gnawed at him, and he couldn't shake the creeping fear that something might be wrong with Emer.

Due to the plight of her family, Phoebe had no choice but to embark on the path of sel...
