

Chapter 1473 The Military Merit System

Liam's words elicited a hearty laugh from Caden. "I knew I didn't misjudge you. You are smart and have clearly seen through the issue. However, my decision to let in the Dremer army is solely for the benefit of the Rosefinch Galaxy. Firstly, it serves as a reminder to all cultivators within the Rosefinch Galaxy. Secondly, it provides our soldiers with real combat training. Thirdly, it helps us discover more talents."

Liam nodded, agreeing with Caden.

After all, the members of the Human Clan's senior management had maintained their positions for so long, a testament to their far-from-mediocre abilities and the unlikelihood of making such fundamental errors.

Caden smiled at Liam and said, "If you have any more questions, feel free to ask them now."

Hearing this, Liam nodded. He had been in the Cosmic realm for less than six months and was still getting to grips with many things here.

To him, the Cosmic realm was like a mystery waiting to be unraveled.

Seizing this rare opportunity, Liam was eager to learn as much as possible.

After some thought, he said, "I'd like to understand more about the military merit system."

Having been a five-star general on Blue Star before, Liam naturally held a deep interest in military affairs.

From what he understood so far, he suspected that the military merit system held a status equivalent to the task system of the Network of Human Sovereign. After all, the Human Clan relied heavily on its warriors, and the army was of extraordinary significance.

Caden appeared to have anticipated Liam's question. He responded with a smile, "The Human Clan has thrived for so many years not just by relying on a task system. The task system awards cultivators with points for their cultivation, which isn't directly beneficial to their careers. The military merit system, however, stands shoulder to shoulder with the task system, and in terms of strategic importance to the Human Clan, its importance even surpasses the task system's."

Liam listened intently to Caden's words, carefully absorbing the information before nodding slightly in understanding.

Caden emphasized that the military merit system was foundational for the Human Clan's survival over the years, especially since the Human Clan was under the constant threat of attacks from other races.

After elucidating the significance of the military merit system to Liam, Caden said, "To put it simply, the amount of military merit point one accumulates directly influences their rank within the army. The higher the rank, the greater the power and privileges one will obtain."

After a pause, he continued, "Within our Human Clan's army, there are four ranks. Listed in ascending order, they are: Warrior, Captain, Colonel, and General. Each rank, akin to cultivation realms, is divided into nine levels, with the first level being the lowest and the ninth the highest."

Liam nodded thoughtfully and then recalled the 1,000 military merit points he had earned from completing the task earlier. Curious, he asked, "What can I do with my 1,000 military merit points?"

Caden, having anticipated this question from Liam, responded, "Your 1,000 military merit points have allowed you to activate the military merit system. In other words, with these points, you've transitioned from the most inconspicuous soldier on the battlefield to a level-one warrior.*

Surprised by this revelation, Liam accessed the Network of Human Sovereign and discovered, just as Caden had mentioned, that he was now part of the military merit system, with his data clearly displayed within it.

