

Chapter 1474 Caden's Words

"Name: Liam Hoffman. Rank: Level-one Warrior. Military Merit Point: 1000."

Although Liam's profile in the military merit system was succinct, it provided enough information for him to grasp the essentials.

After observing Liam review the military merit system, Caden paused before explaining, "Once you activate the military merit system, you can ascend to a higher rank for every 1000 military merit points you earn."

Liam gave a slight nod. Having a clear pathway for advancement alleviated his concerns.

Back on Blue Star, he had attained the rank of a five-star general and developed his own combat strategies.

This experience left Liam quite confident about his potential promotion to the general rank.

Liam inquired, "How challenging is it to earn military merit points?"

Caden, sensing Liam's growing curiosity about the system, felt a sense of satisfaction and chuckled. "It's neither overly difficult nor particularly easy. Each military task has a limit to the merit points one can earn. For example, the cap for your current task is 1000 military merit points. However, since you single-handedly destroyed the Dremer army and performed exceptionally, all the merit points for this task were awarded to you."

Liam finally grasped why he had received the military merit points after completing the mission, while Herman, who had finished second, had earned none.

It turned out that Liam had eliminated 99% of the enemies by himself, leaving no opportunity for others to claim a share of the military merit points.

Liam sighed internally. It was clear that amassing enough military merit points to ascend to the general rank would require him to relentlessly undertake military tasks.

If he could secure 1000 merit points per task, he would need to complete at least 28 tasks to achieve his goal.

Caden continued, "Military merit points are significantly more valuable than task points and special points. However, utilizing these points also necessitates the appropriate rank. I won't delve into the details now; you'll discover more in the future."

Liam nodded, deeply appreciative of the insights Caden had shared about the military merit system. He said gratefully, "Thank you for your guidance."

Caden waved his hand with a smile, but his expression soon turned solemn. "Liam, given my military background, I initially considered recommending you for army training. However, I decided the matter should ultimately be your choice, not mine. I'm telling you this because, in the future, others may try to curry favor and persuade you to join their forces. It's crucial that you think carefully about such decisions. You are far more important than you think."

Liam was puzzled by Caden's words.

He looked at Caden with confusion, unsure why he had said that.

Nonetheless, out of respect and gratitude, Liam nodded and assured him, "I understand. I have a clear vision for my future, and I will not stray from it."

In his mind, Liam believed Caden was cautioning him against squandering his talents on unworthy pursuits. That was why he had responded like that.
