

Chapter 1494 Liam's Proposal

Liam showed the law power in his grasp and announced, "I've already found the law power of Nocturne. Our main task now is to safely transport it out of the secret realm."

He then shared the information he had gathered from earlier encounters. "At the exit of the secret realm, a team led by three level-nine Primogem Kings from the Dremer race is setting an ambush. The journey to transport Nocturne's law power out of the secret realm will undoubtedly be fraught with danger!"

Cataleya and the others furrowed their brows, recognizing the gravity of the situation.

After some deliberation, Liam proposed, "Here's the plan: I'll escort Nocturne's law power. The rest of you use the Passing Wands to return to the Rosefinch Galaxy and ask the Lord of Rosefinch to send reinforcements to assist me as soon as possible."

Since the Passing Wands couldn't transport Nocturne's law power, they would need to transport it back in person.

However, no sooner had Liam finished speaking than Hilliard vehemently objected, shouting, "No way!"

Hilliard's objection stemmed not from concern for Liam but from envy.

Despite the dangers, the rewards for successfully escorting Nocturne's law power were significant. Not only would it bring substantial rewards, but it would also make the person earn the gratitude of the powerful Primogem Emperor Nocturne.

Caught up in his emotions, Hilliard blurted out, "Why should you get all the rewards? No way! I don't agree!"

His outburst caused even Alexis and Gabriela, who had no previous conflicts with him, to look at him with disapproval.

Everyone understood that the escort mission was fraught with danger, and any misstep could prove fatal. Thus, if Liam managed to successfully complete it, Cataleya and the others would not envy him.

After challenging Liam, Hilliard caught the disapproving glances from the group and quickly sensed his blunder. His face flushed as he scrambled for an excuse. "Is what Liam claims necessarily true? Just because he says there's an ambush at the secret realm's exit, does it mean it's accurate? Perhaps he made it up to monopolize the mission's rewards!"

Hilliard's attempt to deflect only intensified the group's disdain for him. They all knew the Dremer race wasn't stupid. The mission to get Nocturne's law power was critical, so, of course, they would be well-prepared.

Even if the threat wasn't exactly as Liam described, the path to transport the law power would undoubtedly be riddled with other dangers, making the mission inherently risky.

Liam, observing Hilliard's agitated expression, let out a mocking laugh. He extended the law power of Nocturne to Hilliard and said, "Since you doubt my words, you can take over the escort mission! What are you waiting for? Take the law power!"

Now, Hilliard found himself caught in a dilemma.

His earlier objection was driven by his desire to prevent Liam from getting all the rewards, not by a willingness to take on the perilous task himself.

Although the escort mission could be carried out by the whole team, it was best carried out solo. After all, a lone escort was less likely to attract attention.
