

Chapter 1497 Digging For The Treasure

Liam didn't rush forward. He stayed hidden, observing the creatures below, carefully assessing their strength and defenses.

The creatures had a natural resilience, after all. Charging in recklessly could backfire if any of the creatures turned out to be stronger than he had expected.

After all, the secret realm wasn't just their territory; it was also filled with teams from the Dremer race.

Liam believed if he wanted to get his hands on the treasure Emer had told him about, he would have to eliminate every risk before making his move. He needed a plan that left nothing to chance.

After some patient observation, he counted fewer than twenty creatures below, with the strongest only reaching the first level of a Primogem King.

With his Death Power amplifying his own strength to match that of a level-one Primogem King, Liam felt assured. Here, all he needed was his "Fatal Hex" to wipe out every creature.

Once his plan was set, he quietly sent tendrils of "Fatal Hex" energy floating above each creature's head.

As the death energy hung in the air, he allowed himself a slight smile. "Die," he whispered.

At his command, the "Fatal Hex" energy exploded.

A wave of chaotic, destructive force surged downward.

The creatures soon realized the situation they were in, frantically searching for their attacker. But Liam had already hidden himself well, making it impossible for them to find him.

Then, like a boulder crashing down from the sky, the "Fatal Hex" energy struck, shattering every creature's head.

The creatures' heads burst apart, filling the air with a mist of blood. Their bodies fell to the ground with heavy thuds.

Seeing that every creature had been eliminated, Liam finally let out a sigh of relief. He activated his flying device and descended smoothly to the ground.

As Liam touched down, the thick, metallic scent of blood reached him. He ignored it, focusing instead on reaching out to Emer. "Emer, locate that treasure you mentioned earlier for me—quickly."

Eager to assist, Emer began scanning the area without delay.

Soon enough, Emer responded, "Master, the treasure is underground, about three hundred meters east!"

A thrill ran through Liam. "And how deep underground is it?"

After a pause, Emer replied, "It is roughly a hundred meters down."

Armed with this precise information, Liam gave a slight nod and moved toward the spot Emer had indicated, preparing to dig.

As a cultivator, he wouldn't need to dig with his hands.

Primogem energy soon flared around him, and in a powerful blast, he directed it at the ground.

Chunks of soil flew into the air as he carved his primogem energy downward with ease.

Within moments, the soil on the surface was cleared away, revealing what lay hidden below.