

Chapter 1520 Reward

---

Liam glanced at Hilliard, who was smugly convinced he had the upper hand, and couldn't help but shake his head slightly.

Seeing this, Hilliard smirked, convinced that he had rattled Liam. Without missing a beat, he leaned in, his voice dripping with mockery. "So, you're finally realizing you're out of your league, huh? You just got lucky; that's all! Do you honestly believe you're equipped to take on the Dremer race with your pathetic skills?"

Liam merely shook his head, a faint look of pity crossing his face as he replied in a detached tone, "No, you've got it wrong. I just think you're making a complete fool of yourself."

Hilliard's smugness vanished, his expression darkening as anger flashed in his eyes. He was poised to hit Liam, but with Caden nearby, he forced himself to hold back, swallowing his rage.

Instead, he muttered in his heart, "Just wait. Soon enough, I'll challenge you—and when I do, every point you have will be mine!"

Gabriela, watching the tension escalate between Liam and Hilliard, felt a headache coming on. Deciding to intervene and change the subject, she asked Liam, "Liam, was your journey back to the camp smooth?"

Liam nodded slightly and smiled. "Yes. I was fortunate to have Mr. Santos help me along the way. Without him, I wouldn't have been able to return with the law power of Nocturne."

Hearing this, Hilliard smirked. He knew it!

To him, it was clear that Liam had only managed to return to the Rosefinch Galaxy with the law power of Nocturne because of Winfred's assistance.

However, no one noticed Winfred's expression at that moment.

A fleeting trace of resignation crossed his face.

He was the only one who truly knew Liam's performance during the Dremer race's attack.

It was true—his intervention had played a crucial role in ensuring Liam's safe return with the law power.

Yet, Liam had also made substantial contributions of his own.

Since Liam chose not to say that, Winfred kept his silence, respecting Liam's decision.

Liam was free to handle things as he wished. After all, the mission statistics from the Network of Human Sovereign wouldn't make any mistakes.

Then, Caden publicly shared details of the interstellar battlefield—how Liam's team had successfully retrieved the law power of Nocturne.

It was only after Caden's explanation that everyone understood why Liam was qualified to return to the Rosefinch Galaxy on a Venerable-Emperor-Level warship.

Suddenly, any doubts about Liam's right to use the warship vanished, replaced by genuine respect.

Following this, Caden, exercising his authority as the Lord of Rosefinch, distributed the mission rewards to Liam and his team.

"Mission accomplished. Now tallying up the mission rewards. First place in this mission, Liam. Awarded 1, 000 mission points, 1, 000 military merits, and 100 days of free training time."

"Second place, Alexis. Awarded 300 mission points and 20 days of free training time."

"Third place, Cataleya. Awarded 280 mission points and 19 days of free training time."

"Fourth place, Gabriela. Awarded 260 mission points and 18 days of free training time."

"Fifth place, Hilliard. Awarded 200 mission points and 15 days of free training time."

Although the secret realm that Liam and his team had ventured into lay beyond the reach of the Network of Human Sovereign, they were still bound to its mission system.

This meant that, regardless of individual performance, they could still receive the most precise evaluations from the Network of Human Sovereign

Liam's ability to secure all the military merits from this mission was proof of one thing: the number of Dremer members he had defeated was far greater than the combined total taken down by Hilliard and the other three!

