

Chapter 1531 Reform

Cataleya's eyes lingered on Liam, her gaze shimmering with an intensity that hinted at something unspoken.

Meanwhile, Alexis and Gabriela exchanged a subtle look of relief, grateful they hadn't ended up on Liam's bad side.

Offending a genius like Liam would have caused them huge trouble.

Gabriela couldn't help but chuckle bitterly, murmuring, "Guess we really weren't very useful when Liam and we were a team."

The realization was a bitter pill to swallow, but none of them could deny Liam's jaw-dropping prowess. His performance during the mission had been nothing short of spectacular, leaving the others in awe.

Truth be told, Liam didn't need anyone's help; he could've handled the mission to rescue the law power of Nocturne all on his own.

And he had!

Just this alone made Gabriela and the others admire Liam immensely.

Cataleya said with a smile, "It's alright. At least we got some reward points and free training time."

Alexis nodded slightly.

His agreement caught both Cataleya and Gabriela off guard.

They knew Alexis well—he was quite proud.

For him to admit they had not been useful was something significant. It was clear he acknowledged Liam's ability.

After Winfred publicly recounted Liam's achievements, he glanced at Hilliard, whose face had turned ashen, and said coldly, "Can you admit defeat now? And don't even think about welching on your bet. If you try, I won't need the Lord of Rosefinch to deal with you. I'll do it myself."

Hilliard collapsed to the ground.

When he grasped the weight of Liam's awe-inspiring achievements, he knew there was no way he could back out of his bet.

The stakes were clear—Caden wouldn't tolerate defiance, and the punishment for trying would be harsh.

Gritting his teeth, Hilliard finally gave a strained nod. "I accept defeat," he muttered, resignation etched across his face.

Winfred smirked, letting out a cold snort before slinging an arm around Liam's shoulder. "Good job, Liam! But you've got a soft streak, you know that? Guys like him need a kick where it hurts to know their place. You've held back!"

Liam just chuckled.

Under Winfred's boisterous lead, Liam made his way back to the audience area.

Caden's steady gaze landed on Liam, and he smiled. "Well done," he said.

Then, with measured grace, Caden stood up, his voice ringing out with authority.

"What we've witnessed today with Hilliard underscores a deeper issue in the Rosefinch Galaxy. Some of our brightest minds have grown complacent, letting their talent breed arrogance. This ends now. Effective immediately, I will be instituting a sweeping reform across the Rosefinch Galaxy, and this will be disseminated through the Network of Human Sovereign. I will establish a dedicated oversight group tasked with addressing this issue!"

Hilliard's downfall had become the perfect turning point for Caden to initiate these long-overdue reforms.

The audience understood the gravity of his words, their collective nods signaling agreement.

Suddenly, Alexis stepped forward, his voice steady and resolute. "Lord of Rosefinch, I, Alexis, volunteer to join this oversight group and contribute to the Rosefinch Galaxy."

Caden raised an eyebrow, genuinely surprised by Alexis' action, not expecting him to have such a sense of responsibility.

"Very well," Caden said with a nod of approval. "You will lead this oversight group."

