

Chapter 1579 Christos' Intentions

Upon hearing Christos's words, Liam decided not to conceal anything.

With unwavering certainty, he confessed, "Mr. Ellis, my primogem energy has been at a standstill for quite some time, with no glimmer of progress in sight."

A knowing smile played across Christos' lips. "Just as I suspected. Your mastery of your law powers has reached an impasse. Without intervention, you'd be anchored in your current realm for decades before ascending to the Primogem King realm!"

Liam was startled by this revelation; the gravity in Christos's expression told him that Christos was saying the truth.

What reason would Christos have to deceive him anyway?

Recognizing that Christos had come specifically to offer guidance to him, Liam seized the opportunity. "Mr. Ellis, since you've identified my issue, is there a way to resolve it?"

Christos' confident smile never wavered as he responded, "Of course. I wouldn't have broached the subject if I didn't know how to solve your problem."

Relief washed over Liam. The prospect of his primogem energy remaining stagnant had weighed heavily on his mind. Christos' earlier words rang true—without outside help, the path to the Primogem King realm would stretch across decades for him.

The root of his predicament was clear as crystal to Liam now. His meteoric rise in power had come at a cost, weakening the foundation he had once built so carefully.

The solution, in theory, seemed simple enough—shore up his foundation anew, and his worries would be gone.

Yet the real challenge lay in unearthing the means to accomplish this feat. Still, with Christos claiming to possess the solution, Liam was not concerned.

Christos' voice took on a mystical quality as he said, "Deep within the Sanctuary of Human Sovereign stands an extraordinary relic—a towering tree, born from condensed law power itself. Those who meditate beneath its ancient boughs will find their cultivation naturally aligning with the cosmic order. By seeking enlightenment beneath this tree, you'll have the chance to rebuild your foundation from its very roots."

Hope bloomed in Liam's heart as he recognized this golden opportunity fate had dropped into his lap.

Without hesitation, he nodded.

Christos' face lit up with barely contained joy at Liam's eager response.

Though his smile appeared genuine, layers of calculation lurked beneath its surface.

Truth be told, Liam's exceptional talent had long captured his attention.

With such a gifted genius heading to the Sanctuary of Human Sovereign, he would have many opportunities to take Liam under his wing.

Yet he knew that making any recruitment attempts outside the Sanctuary of Human Sovereign would undoubtedly incur Caden's fury.

The surrounding guests traded meaningful glances, the truth as clear as day in their eyes. Everyone could see through Christos' thinly veiled intentions.

These seasoned observers, each a master of reading between the lines, could see right through Christos' artful scheme to draw Liam into the Sanctuary of Human Sovereign.

They believed he was truly bold for doing this.

Were Caden present, he would have cast aside all pretense of celebrating Katherine's birthday and confronted Christos without hesitation.

Of course, only Caden possessed the nerve to do something like that to Christos.

After all, Christos was no ordinary person. He stood as a venerated elder of the Sanctuary of Human Sovereign. Throughout the vast expanse of the Rosefinch Galaxy, precious few could claim to match his standing, let alone surpass it.

No one present would dare voice their true thoughts about Christos' shameless conduct. To do so would be tantamount to seeking their own destruction!
