

Chapter 1604 It's Not Dead Yet

Liam didn't just rely on the Network of Human Sovereign's exchange store for Meteor Gold.

And he placed great importance on mission points; they were essential for boosting his rank and authorization level.

Liam hoped to dodge any unforeseen hiccups on this mission that could cost him mission points.

Losing mission points would push back his ascent in authorization level significantly.

Lindy was glued to the screen, her eyes sparkling with anticipation.

Noticing her eagerness, Liam grinned and said, "Let's head out, Lindy."

As Liam announced their departure to deal with the peculiar creatures, Lindy's excitement surged. She nodded vigorously and followed him onto the warship. They set off promptly for the location marked on the screen.

They arrived at the first target quickly.

Below, Liam noticed an odd creature meandering on the ground.

The creature was translucent, glowing with an unsettling light and radiating a mysterious aura.

After a quick assessment, Liam confirmed through the advanced Spirit Search Stone that the creature was at the peak of the eighth-level Primogem Expert.

Watching the creature, Lindy quickly said, "I'll take this one, Liam."

Liam gave Lindy a look, aware of her status as a ninth-level Primogem Expert. She could easily handle a creature from the eighth level.

Plus, he could help her if things went south.

Therefore, Liam nodded and said, "Alright. Just be cautious, Lindy."

Lindy's face lit up with a delighted smile, and she chuckled. "Don't worry, Liam. This is a piece of cake for me."

Upon arriving, Lindy had been mulling over the idea that she too should contribute her efforts.

After all, Liam had provided fifty advanced Spirit Search Stones. So she felt it was only right to contribute as well, believing this would be fair to Liam.

Lindy unsheathed her sword and leaped down.

The creature, aimlessly wandering below, sensed Lindy's movements and looked up.

It caught sight of Lindy, sword poised high, slicing downward toward its head.

Without dodging, the creature met the swift arc of Lindy's sword. In a flash, Liam watched as Lindy decapitated the creature with a clean stroke.

A triumphant grin spread across Lindy's face. With the creature killed in one decisive blow, she felt she had indeed made her contribution.

But just as she lowered her guard and began advancing to retrieve the crystal core—the creature's power source—Liam's urgent voice halted her.

"Lindy, watch out! It's not dead yet!"

Startled by Liam's warning, Lindy spun around only to find the headless creature standing up once again.

A new head was rapidly forming at its severed neck.

What was going on?

A chill ran down Lindy's spine as she stared at the creature in disbelief.

She clearly saw that the head she had just severed from the creature was still lying motionless on the ground.

Chapter 1605 It's Because Of The World Power

Lindy's face went pale with fear at the sight of the strange creature coming back to life. Acting on pure instinct, she raised her blade and launched herself at the creature again.

Without warning, an otherworldly aura enveloped the creature, its power surging exponentially with each passing moment.

In mere heartbeats, the creature's strength skyrocketed from the eighth-level to the ninth-level of the Primogem Expert tier.

Lindy could only watch in horror as the creature took her sword strike before countering with a devastating palm strike.

The impact sent her reeling, blood trickling from the corner of her mouth as pain radiated through her body.

Despite her superior rank, the truth was undeniable—she was thoroughly outmatched by this creature.

Just as the creature unleashed a bone-chilling roar and lunged for Lindy, Liam stepped in.

At that moment, the sword of darkness materialized in Liam's grip. With deadly precision, he launched it through the air, the blade finding its mark in the creature's neck.

The dark blade cleaved through flesh and bone, severing the creature's head in one clean stroke.

This time, the creature, which normally would have revived, just collapsed.

Strange energies radiated from the headless corpse, intertwined with unmistakable traces of Death Power.

Lindy caught this detail and turned to Liam, her eyes swimming with confusion. She asked Liam how he had killed the creature.

With composure, Liam offered a slight smile and explained, "I infused the sword of darkness with a touch of my Death Power. With the Death Power's influence, resurrection is impossible."

Still trembling from the encounter, Lindy nodded and admitted, "That was absolutely terrifying! Why didn't the creature die even after I decapitated it?"

Lindy instinctively asked Liam for the answer.

To her, Liam had always been an endless fountain of knowledge. That was why she had directed her question at him.

Liam had wondered about this question too, but after using Death Power to kill the creature, he found the answer.

His eyes gleaming with understanding, Liam explained, "It's because of the World Power. The creatures inhabiting this planetary system have begun to harness its fundamental force, the World Power. That's why they're so difficult to kill!"

Lindy's eyes widened in disbelief as she exclaimed, "World Power? Could this mean the planetary system's law powers are crumbling? Otherwise, the World Power wouldn't be so extensively drained by these creatures, would it?"

A glimmer of approval crossed Liam's face as he nodded thoughtfully. "My thoughts exactly. The World Lord of the No. 1568 planetary system must be grappling with an unprecedented crisis. They probably neglected the control of this planetary system and its World Power, allowing these creatures to exploit the situation."

Lindy fell silent, her mind reeling. Though she had never stood in the presence of a planetary system's World Lord, she knew well their reputation as absolute sovereigns within their domains.

While the full implications of a World Lord facing catastrophe were unbelievable, Lindy's trust in Liam's insight never wavered.

Watching Liam expertly extract the crystal core from the dead creature, Lindy said, "This mission will be far more treacherous than we expected. While you wield the Death Power to prevent these beings from resurrecting, the rest of us lack such abilities. For most, they are bound to fail to complete this mission."

Liam nodded and replied, "Indeed. But since they opted to take part in this mission, they must be ready for the possibility of failure."

As these words hung in the air, his skilled hands completed the extraction of the crystal core.

The crystal core caught the light, its mesmerizing sparkle evident.

With practiced precision, Liam studied the crystal core. There was a trace of World Power in it. His theory was confirmed.

Yet as death's cold embrace claimed the creature's remains, its stored World Power dispersed like morning mist, returning to the vast expanse of the No. 1568 planetary system.

While anxiety etched itself across Lindy's features, Liam maintained his composure.

He didn't concern himself with the current plight of the World Lord of this planetary system.

Still, if there was something to gain in return, Liam wouldn't mind helping the World Lord with their trouble.
