

Chapter 1614 The Revelation

Lindy's head spun as she and Liam made their way back to the mission hall, memories of the No. 1568 planetary system and its formidable World Lord still fresh in her mind.

The revelation had shaken her to her core—a World Lord, despite possessing mere Primogem King-level strength, wielded power in their domain that surpassed even Primogem Saints.

Such was the awe-inspiring might of World Lords, reigning supreme in their respective worlds.

A shiver ran down Lindy's spine as she contemplated Liam's mastery over four World Powers.

She hadn't expected Liam's achievements to be so impressive.

It seemed Nocturne was right about Liam's abilities.

After submitting the mission report, Lindy smiled at Liam. "Liam, the mission is done, so I'm leaving now."

Understanding her desire not to disturb him by staying by his side, Liam nodded.

"Okay, goodbye, Lindy."

Alone now, Liam focused on his long-awaited goal—advancing to level five authority.

This authority level had been his coveted goal for a long time.

Only with this rank could cultivators venture beyond the Human Clan's four major planetary systems to explore the vast Cosmic realm.

Without level five authority, departure from Human Clan territory remained impossible.

Liam's purpose in ascending to the Cosmic realm was straightforward: to rescue his wife and son.

To achieve this, he first needed the ability to freely leave Human Clan territory.

Without meeting this requirement, his chance to ascend would be wasted.

Liam began by checking the number of mission points he currently had.

Upon verifying that he had sufficient points to advance to level five authority, he wasted no time and resolutely opted to upgrade his authority level.

Liam's authority ascended from level four to five.

Within the Human Clan's Cosmic realm, authority was divided into five distinct tiers.

Level five represented the absolute summit.

Those who achieved this pinnacle earned the Human Clan's complete acknowledgment, granting them unrestricted freedom to venture beyond the territory's boundaries at will.

With this newfound authority, members could traverse beyond Human Clan territory without bounds.

A smile graced Liam's features as his authority level reached five, his recent endeavors finally bearing fruit.

From now on, he could move freely throughout the vast Cosmic realm.

Liam muttered under his breath, "Julie, Asher, hold on just a bit longer. I'll save you soon."

Determination blazed in his heart.

The confrontation with the Saint Society in the Cosmic realm was inevitable.

His mission extended beyond rescuing Julie and Asher; he would also avenge his grandfather and the others from the Celestial Realm.

This oath of vengeance burned eternal in his soul.

In the City of Divinity.

The City Lord's vigilant watch over the Network of Human Sovereign abruptly shifted to the No. 1568 planetary system.

His keen observation brought subtle changes to his expression as he raised his hand, weaving intricate calculations through the air.

This calculation brought a look of delight to the City Lord's face.

The City Lord's composure cracked as waves of excitement coursed through his body. His usual dignified demeanor forgotten, he rose from his seat and began pacing the room.

Under his breath, barely a whisper, he uttered, "He's returned..."

The man the City Lord referred to was Necrothar.

As a Primogem Deity, the City Lord possessed a connection with all Primogem Emperors within the Human Clan.

Once he managed to tether his racing thoughts, the City Lord performed another divination.

This time, the results painted his face with pure astonishment.

"How is this possible?" The words tumbled from his lips before he could contain them. "Liam... He's Necrothar's reincarnation?"

The revelation sent his mind into chaos.

Despite his intimate knowledge of Liam's extraordinary capabilities, never once had he drawn the connection to Necrothar.

After all, Necrothar stood as a colossus in their history, the first Human Sovereign of their clan, wielding immense power.

Legends spoke of his ascension to Primogem Deity status at merely twenty-nine years of age.

Liam's talent was much less impressive compared to this terrifying ability.

The City Lord had never linked Liam to Necrothar for this reason.

Without Liam's proactive investigation, he likely would never have discovered this.

"That makes sense. Liam's incredible talent is no surprise now. He's actually the reincarnation of Necrothar. Even that burning hatred he carries; it mirrors exactly what the ancient texts say of Necrothar."

Like a mad man, the City Lord muttered to himself, his dignified demeanor forgotten in the wake of revelation.

Through his frenzied thoughts, a crucial memory surfaced—ancient directives passed down by the Human Clan's forefathers.

The gravity of the situation spurred the City Lord into immediate action. Through the Network of Human Sovereign, he dispatched an urgent summons to Caden, beckoning him to the City of Divinity.

A shadow fell across the City Lord's features as the weight of his next decision pressed upon him.

The issue he was about to address was crucial to the destiny of the entire Human Clan.

Their future prosperity, perhaps even their very survival, balanced precariously on the outcome of his next move.

His mind wandered to the tantalizing possibility: if they could truly awaken Necrothar's past incarnation, the Human Clan's military might would soar to unprecedented heights.

Yet, this path carried its own price—one that would shatter his long-held desire of taking Liam as his disciple.

But the City Lord knew what was the right thing to do.

When measured against the fate of his entire race and the monumental advantages that awakening Necrothar's memory would bring, his personal desire to mentor a disciple seemed trivial.

80

