

Chapter 71 Kervin Was In Trouble

Kervin laughed and responded, "What are you saying? You are the new owner? Don't be ridiculous!"

"Didn't Booker inform you that his boss had come once before, and today marked his second visit?" Liam gazed coldly at Kervin while keeping his cool.

While listening, Kervin was astounded. He then noticed the CEO of Kingland Group and Liam shared the same last name.

The fact that they shared the same last name could have been a mere coincidence, but there were too many other coincidences to ignore.

Kervin was unwilling to believe it and found it difficult to accept.

Kervin had offended Liam severally, so if it turned out that Liam was indeed the CEO of Kingland Group, he would be in big trouble.

Through gritted teeth, Kervin cursed, "This is nonsense! Over the past three years, the Lambert family has continuously humiliated you. Moreover, your wife was even stolen away by Dennis. How could someone like you, a loser, possibly have a hundred million to buy a hotel?"

He waved his hand, and a group of security guards immediately advanced toward Liam, preparing to escort him away.

Liam had pocketed his hands, and his expression turned into a sneer as he queried, "Do you truly wish to force me to depart once more?"

The more composed Liam appeared, the more intense the apprehension in Kervin's heart grew.

After a brief moment of hesitation, he signaled to the security guards to stop and then spoke in a remorseful tone. "I apologize, but could you please prove you are the new owner of the Von Merri Hotel?"

"It is simple." Liam dialed a number and spoke loudly into the speakerphone. "Booker, I need you to get to the Von Merri Hotel right away."

Following the call, Liam's lips curved into a subtle smile, and he added with a mischievous twinkle in his eyes, "Can you wait just a moment?"

Kervin felt too intimidated to risk being discourteous. Stationed by the doorway, he mumbled under his breath in a voice barely audible to himself, "I suppose I'll wait a few minutes then."

After roughly five minutes, a sleek black vehicle pulled up to the scene.

Booker hastily emerged from the car and trotted over to Liam's side.

"Mr. Hoffman, how may I assist you?" he said, bowing and greeting Liam.

The respectful demeanor he displayed surprised all those who were there.

Booker stood upright and asked Kervin, "Were you not curious to find out who purchased your hotel? There he is, Liam, the CEO of the Kingland Group!"

These words shattered Kervin's final hope entirely.

Filled with anxiety, he raised his voice and asked, "Why didn't you inform me about this earlier?"

"I've dropped numerous hints, but you chose to ignore them. You have brought this upon yourself," Booker replied as he helplessly shook his head.

At that moment, Klaus's car pulled up at the hotel's entrance.

Kervin was surprised and promptly exclaimed, "I've already repaid the debt, yet you still expect to receive free food and drinks?"

After Kervin and Booker signed the contract yesterday, he promptly repaid the money he owed Klaus.

Klaus sneered and disregarded Kervin.

He headed directly toward Liam, with a group of men following closely behind. They all bowed and exclaimed,

"Boss!"

The pronunciation of the word "boss" caused Kervin to collapse onto the ground.

Kervin was not foolish. At that instant, he comprehended everything.

It became clear to him that everything had been a ploy designed to coerce him into selling the hotel.

No wonder Booker had been so zealous and had taken him to the casino.

It made sense why he had won every gamble in the first few days but lost all the money subsequently.

Kervin swiftly rose to his feet from the ground, seized Booker by the collar, and bellowed, "Why did you do this to me?"

