

Chapter 767 Registration

Liam asked slowly, "Emmeline, do you happen to know how I can enroll in this test?"

Emmeline gestured toward the center of the island and replied, "There's no registration point around the outskirts. To sign up, you'll need to head to the center."

Upon hearing this, Liam seemed a bit self-conscious. Despite the remarkable effects of the medication Claudine had given him, he still felt a degree of unsteadiness in his recovery.

Consequently, moving around was not very convenient for him, especially considering he was new to the island and unfamiliar with its layout.

Getting from the outskirts to the center wouldn't be an easy task.

Observing Liam's predicament, Emmeline said, "It's alright, Liam. If it's difficult for you, I'll accompany you to complete the registration."

Turning to Claudine, she added, "Oh, by the way, Mom, I recall there's a 100-consumption point registration fee, right?"

After some hesitation, Claudine handed her card to Emmeline and cautioned her, "Remember, return promptly after registration. Don't get too engrossed in other activities."

In that moment, Liam felt deeply touched. He had learned about the island's consumption system in the past few days. While a hundred consumption points might not seem like much, it could sustain Emmeline and Claudine for a week.

Their kindness toward a stranger like him was truly remarkable, especially Emmeline.

It appeared that the island's customs, or perhaps something else, had made Emmeline remarkably open-hearted, even with a stranger like Liam.

Emmeline tightly clutched Liam's arm as they proceeded together, making Liam feel like a warm presence was constantly beside him.

Guided by Emmeline, a native of the island, they swiftly reached the center.

Contrary to the rudimentary outskirts, the modernity of the central area far exceeded Liam's expectations. The architecture here left him in awe.

Not even in Invone had he seen such advanced buildings. The public facilities on the streets were evidently top-notch technology, boasting a high degree of automation.

The entire city was enclosed in a massive climate-controlled glass structure. Even on a cold day like today, the temperature in the center remained quite comfortable.

With Emmeline's assistance and his valid identification, Liam effortlessly completed the registration.

However, the actual testing wouldn't commence right away; it was scheduled for three days from now.

While reviewing the list of applicants, Liam noticed the name Bryan Davis.

Though there wasn't direct competition in the test, Liam felt a strong determination to watch over Emmeline and Claudine and enhance their lives if he could join the Salvation Society.

It was the only way he could repay their kindness.

On their way back, Emmeline carefully explained the test to Liam.

The first challenge involved scaling a special gravity mountain, a challenge that had remained consistent for hundreds of years. The Salvation Society publicly stated that this challenge assessed a person's patience and the limits of their physical capabilities.

It was to be taken seriously, as statistics showed that 90% of candidates were eliminated in this initial phase.

The details of the subsequent challenges were confidential and subject to change, but one thing was certain: they were much more challenging than the first. The test was a rigorous process aimed at selecting the best of the best.

It was clear that joining the Salvation Society was no simple task.

Nonetheless, Liam was undaunted by these challenges. He was resolute in his determination to become a part of it.
