

Chapter 772 A Puzzling Turn Of Events

Half a day had gone by, and as Liam had anticipated, some people began to feel fatigued and took breaks. However, Liam, who had been steadily progressing, was improving with each step. His sense of imbalance had diminished by 60%, and his efficiency not only didn't decrease but actually increased.

When he reached the middle point, he caught up with Bryan.

The two of them walked together, but Liam didn't taunt Bryan. Instead, he gave him a disdainful look and continued his ascent without breaking his pace.

The silence between them spoke volumes.

Bryan clenched his teeth in frustration and jeered, "You cripple! You're quite the tenacious one, aren't you? Trying to impress me by refusing to take a break, huh?"

Liam completely ignored Bryan and focused on his own pace. He knew his purpose here was to pass the trial, so there was no need to engage in an argument with Bryan.

Bryan, on the other hand, saw Liam's silence as a sign of weakness and took pleasure in provoking him. He believed that Liam was wasting his energy by not resting.

Reflecting on this, Bryan couldn't help but feel self-satisfied.

He muttered to himself, "You cripple, just keep at it. I'll observe how long you can endure. I'll be the one having the last laugh."

Though another half day passed, it remained perpetually daytime inside the blue curtain.

Liam continued climbing and was getting closer to the mountain's peak.

The gravity had become exceptionally strong, but it didn't hinder his progress. Instead, he climbed even faster.

Thanks to Liam's rhythmic approach and robust physique, his sense of imbalance had reduced by over 80%.

He felt more at ease than before.

However, one puzzling aspect was that the distance between the different groups of climbers had widened as Liam approached the top.

He hadn't spotted the first echelon of climbers since he passed the middle point, which raised concerns.

Had they all already reached the summit?

Liam sensed something was amiss.

According to the examiner, reaching the summit was extremely challenging, and many people were in the leading group. Could it be that so many of them reached the top? Or had they all been eliminated?

Quickly, he dismissed that thought. The gravity here was formidable, but not unbearable.

After contemplating for a while, Liam felt even more perplexed.

Nonetheless, the end was within sight, so despite his confusion, he continued ascending step by step.

Soon, only the last set of steps remained, and Liam could clearly see the golden dragon flag, representing the Salvation Society and the destination.

He hastened his pace, and the golden dragon on the flag became increasingly clear.

At that moment, the gravitational force seemed to vanish. Liam moved swiftly in the final stretch. Just as he was about to take the last step, something peculiar occurred.

The bracelet on his wrist suddenly emitted a blue light, and Liam's expression changed as he felt a strong repelling force ahead.

In the next second, he was propelled upward by a powerful force and felt weightless, looking down involuntarily.

There was nothing beneath his feet, as if he were standing on a cloud.

What had just happened?

Liam had no time to contemplate it before his body started plummeting rapidly.
